Sussex police yesterday described the information as a 'significant development' and are appealing to anyone recognising the descriptions to contact them.

The man has told police that the three men entered his shop in Upper Lewes Road, Brighton, as the boy was leaving after buying some sweets. They left after one of them had bought a packet of cigarettes. The descriptions fit those given by the boy, who was kidnapped at 9pm on Sunday while returning home after playing with friends. Police are also working on information given by a motorist who says he saw three men with a car at a garage near the spot where the boy was found at

Many people have offered reward money for information leading to the arrest of the three men. Last night the total was £32,500. This includes £10,000 from The Sun newspaper and

5,000 from an author who vishes to remain anonymous. The man who bought the 20 John Player Special cigarettes was yesterday described as aged 30, 5ft 11 in tall, of big build and with a large stomach. He has very dark brown or black hair which is straight and almost shoulder length. He has a mark on his face which looks like a

The third man is approximately 6ft tall, aged between 20 and 25 and of slim build. He has very blond hair which appears natural but which has been cut very short and layered. He was wearing a white shirt and jumper, fawn trousers and was thought to be the driver of the car.

The newsagent who gave the descriptions was last night helping police draw up photofits and was studying photographs on police records.

The second witness helping police said he saw a darkdescription at a garage at Denton Corner, Newhaven, at about 10.30pm on Sunday night. Two men were standing beside the driver's door and a third was sitting in the driver's seat. The car followed him east towards Seaford and then turned and drove off in the opposite direction.

The boy's ordeal lasted one hour and 40 minutes during which he was driven to an open area in Telscombe, stripped, sexually assaulted and then dumped. He was picked up by a motorist who found him in a sbocked state. The victim of the attack was

Labour set for wrangle over NEC

By Stephen Goodwin

The Labour Party conference in October will open with a rule-book wrangle over elections to the national executive committee. There is doubt over the eligibility of five nominees who were all defeated in the general election in June. They include Miss Joan Lestor and Mrs Ann Taylor, former backbenchers, and Mr John Spellar, winner of the Northfield by-election. The powerful arrangements committee is unhappy at the present NCE's recommendation that the five should be allowed to stand. The executive maintains that had the general election taken place after the conference they would have een eligible to stand as either

MPs or prospective candidates. Mr Wedgwood Benn is among a number of defeated MPs and candidates who are able to stand in their own right as delegates.

Mr Benn is seeking reelection in the constituency section, as are two of the party leadership contenders, Mr Neil Kinnock and Mr Eric Heffer. Mr Michael Meacher, one of the candidates for the deputy leadership, is also seeking one of the seven constituency sears, and another,

Mrs Gwyneth Dunwoody, is going for reelection The party leader and deputy automatically sit on the execuuve committee. A further complication for unions and local parties in deciding how to cast their votes may arise if constituency Labour parties fail to pay their affiliation fees by the postponed date of September 5.

One victim was five months pregnant when the men with dreadlock hairstyles burst into her home and took it in turns to rape her. They threatened to kill her son, aged three, if she would not give in, and she lost her baby as a result.

Passing sentence at Southwark Crown Court, Judge Abdela told Peter Hibbert, aged 2. and Barrington Crossman, aged 24, both of no settled address: "In my experience, these are about the most appalling series of rapes which could have been committed by ordinary human beings".

The two men were members of a group of rastafarians known as "trouble posse"

Hibbert raped three women a total of six times and Crossman raped four women a total of five times between May and October last vear.

Judge Abdela said that they had instilled such terror in their victims that they were at first too frightened to report the attacks for fear of reprisals.

One girl aged 17, raped three times by Hibbert and twice by Crossman, was so frightened for her life that she failed to turn up at court at first to give evidence against the men. The judge ordered that she should be

The girls were Rastafarians or sympathetic to the creed. But, Miss Curnow added.

"In all the attacks, the girls were roughly treated, threatened with violence and knives were produced. They threatened to punch their pregnant victim in the stomach if she did not comply." The men were arrested after someone telephoned to say that a neighbouring house was being burgled. Three men were breaking down the front door. It was Hibbert and Crossman and a third rastafarian, Trevor Kettle, who were visiting two girls they had met. One girl fled, but her friend was raped by all three men in a car park nearby. Kettle, also of no settled address, was convicted of the rape at an earlier trial and sentenced to four years' youth custody. Other girls then slowly came forward to

Council concern grows as rent arrears reach record levels

By David Walker, Local Government Correct

Councils are owed record Officers found that, by the end people who have since moved amounts in unpaid rent and singly worried by arrears which in some areas total as much as 15 per cent of rent income.

In Newcastle upon Tyne, arrears grew by 27 per cent between March, last year, and March, this year. In Birmingham, they are estimated at £10m out of total reat income of f142m. In Liverpool, tra-ditionally an area with high arrears, the figure is more than 11 per cent of rent income down from the record 15.5 per cent in 1981-82, when a prolonged strike by typists threw the system into disarray. Some of the worst arrears have accumulated in London, where recent sharp rent rises in the words of one housing manager, the "last straw" for many tenants. The report, written by Mr Jun Draper, of the Havering housing department, depicts a crisis, which has probably worsened since the survey was carried out. In the North-east and North-west a comparable picture has emerged from inquiries by The Times.

British Rail promises streamlined service and to reduce its costs

By John Young

Rail, in contrast to the gloomy projections of the recent Serpell report, is put forward in the British Railways Board's cor-porate plan for 1983-88, pub-lished vesterday.

The plan envisages no drastic changes in the size of the rail network, proposing a reduction of only about 1,900 track miles. Instead, it predicts an increased volume passenger and freight traffic which, combined with manpower reductions of 17,000 and other productivity gains, will much reduce the need for government grants.

"The aim of the plan is to take the railway out of recession through increased volume and improved labour and other productivity, leading to a reduction in real terms of the cost to the taxpayer", it says.

The board said yesterday that it expected to move into profit from 1985 onwards, with group profits of more than £90m by

For the current year it estimates the railways operating losses at £960m which. offset by a public service operation (PSO) grant from the Government and local authorities of £943m, leaves a deficit

But by 1988 it expects to have reduced the losses of £639m. Assuming a PSO grant of £708m, that would leave an operating surplus of £69m and. after taking other activities into account, would be translated into a consolidated profit of

The plan bases its assumptions on the expectation of big improvements in customer service and competitiveness, operational and administrative efficiency, and labour productivity, including a further reduction of 17.000 jobs.

It avoids the question of future fares but says that growth in passenger volume must be won in a highly competitive market by improving product quality and per-

The board emphasized that, although the ending of passenger services on the Settle-Car-lisle route was a firm decision, it proposed to keep the line, apart from the Ripplehead-Appleby section, open for freight. No decision had yet been taken on the closure of Marylebone station in London and the diversion of services into Paddington.

The plan is said to differ from those of previous years in that it contains only those projects that the board believes have a high probability of achievement within the five-years of the plan.

An early start on a 10-year programme of electrification, beginning with the main line from King's Cross to Newcastle upon Tyne and Edinburgh, remains a priority.

A serious split between representatives of employers and unions on the Health and Safety Commission, the organization responsible for workers' health, is expected next week over calls for a formal ban on new blue and brown asbestos products and a further tightening of safety rules on the use of Employers' representatives are likely to disown a report by a senior Health and Safety Executive official which is strongly critical of present enforcement procedures and suggests cutting exposure limits to a tenth of present values. According to one trade union official, the report restandards and drives a "coach and horses" through the executive's procedures.

The report, from a working party chaired by Mr Stephen

10,000 Cambodians flee to Thailand

From Neil Kelly Ampil, western Cambodia

At least 200 Cambodians a veek are making their way through monsoon rains to the Thai border to escape what they claim is unprece repression by Vietnamese occupation troops.

More than 10,000 people have come to bases of the noncommunist Khmer People's National Liberation Front, which includes former Rough regime Pol Pot, since the repression began in late May.

Among the new arrivals are the 1,600 inhabitants of two villages, Phun Lum Veng and Phun Prey in Siem Reap province. During their three-to-four day journey to the border, they saw no Vietnemese troops. For the first time in years, Cambodians are coming to border areas by boat. During a meeting with a visiting delegation of Demo-cratic Senators, Mr Andropov said that the Soviet Union to be the first to put into outer space any type of anti-satellite weapon. The Hispanic vote

Traditional crop pickers of US prepare to pick the president

Hispanic Americans, who could have enormous political influence if they ended their interminable fends, are watching with trepidation and won-der as United States troops pour into Central America, and that might belp to unite them.

President Reagan spent a few days courting their support last week, speaking sometimes in crippled Spanish from a prepared text. By all assess-ments, the net result was to strengthen the overwhelming opposition of most Hispanic Americans to what he is doing in Central America.

The real fear - unrealistic though the Administration says - is that the US will go to war in the south, and that Hispanics will be sent back to their old countries to fight brothers and consins. Only the Cubans feel differently, they ache to return with guns in

Next to blacks, Hispanics are the poorest people of the US. Their divisions are a reflection of the conflicts and differences endemic in Central and South America. Hence the Puerto Ricans in New York have little in common with Mexican farm workers in California, or with Cuban refugees in Miami.

Apart from Cubans, the Hispanics overwhelmingly vote Democrat, when they vote at all. Earlier this month, 200 Hispanic leaders throughout the US opened a national drive to register a million more of their people to vote by next year, with the direct aim of influencing the choice of the next president.

Mr Toney Anaya, a Mexican-American who is the new Governor of New Mexico and one of the principal forces behind the registration drive,

Paraphrasing a recent re-mark by the Rev Jesse Jackson, the black leader, he added: "The hands that have historically picked the lettuce and the cotton in this country are the hands that can pick the next president."

The campaign will cost $3.3m (£2.2m), a mere drop in the ocean of money spent by politicians and causes in the US, but large by the Hispanic record. There will be 300 local registration campaigns in 28

Among Hispanics there is a widespread feeling that at last their time has come. They have elected several leaders of muster enough unity to national standing, including a lasting political force.

There are 14.6 million Hispanic Americans, nearly six million of them eligible to vote. Only about 60 per cent of those have bothered to put their names on the voting register. If that could be rais national average of 67 per cent, the Hispanic "swing vote" could be decisive in states such as New York, Florida, New Jersey and Illinois.

The Republicans have not written off their chances of capturing more Hispanic sup-port. They have the overwhelming backing of the Cubans and point out that many recent immigrants from Central America are fervently anti-communist and, therefore, likely to support Mr Reagan's

The Maharishi Technology of the Unified Field, applied to daily living, will enliven the evolutionary power of natural law to uphold life in all positive values - the individual will enjoy freedom from problems and suffering; every nation will enjoy integrated national consciousness, cultural integrity, selfsufficiency, and invincibility; and the whole family of nations will emply permanent world peace.

GOVERNMENTS INVITED

HE TIMES One of the world's poorest countries has become a chessboard where pieces are moved by powerful outside players. The United States and anti-Libyan African countries wait in the wings

Stand-off in the desert

THE COUNTRY

Hole in the heart of Africa

Chad is an area of land which has never formed itself into an effective state and now barely counts as one.

Physically, politically and economically it is a vacuum at the heart of Africa which must provide a constant temptation to meddle for any even mildly voracious regime in power in the surrounding nations.

From the rugged mountains of the far north it descends into the wastes of the Sahara desert before, from about the 16th parallel beginning gradually to emerge into savannah.

The north is very thinly populated. Covering roughly half the area of the country, it contains only a little more than 2 per cent of the population, perhaps 80,000 people. They are almost entirely nomadic muslims. The south is largely populated by the Sara people, of Bantu stock. They have a much more settled way of life, and having access to virtually the only arable land in the country, they produce the two main cash crops of cotton and groundnuts. They are predominantly either Christian or

The unmetalled roads which link north with south are primarily the product of a bitter and divisive past. for until slavery was stamped out by the French they were essentially arteries for northern slave-traders to descend on the tribes of the south.

Habré

Almost no working institutions of government link these two halves of a nation created by the draughtsman who arranged the map of Africa in the wake of the departing European colonial powers. The banking system has collapsed and earlier this year the Government announced a moratorium on its debts of $75m. But according to World Bank statistics Chad is one of ten nations which have failed to achieve positive growth in their gross national product since 1960. And with a 2.2 per cent per capita annual average rate of decline, its record is the worst in the world.

New divisions have now arisen with the people of the north resenting the greater resources and wealth of the south. Despite this, the present struggle for power, which continues 16 years of endemic internecine warfare, is not essentially between north and south, but between two nothern leaders.

These are Hissene Habré, who emerged in the mid-1970s leading northern forces in resisting the anti-Muslim tendences of the then-government, and Goukouni Oueddei, whom he displaced as president last year. Goukouni is a son of the spiritual leader of the Toubou, the main northern tribe.

For a time they worked together in the Chad government in 1979 with Goukouni as president and Habré as defence minister. This ended with Goukouni claiming that Habré was trying to seize power with French support.

Although Libyan attitudes have wavered from time to time, it has largely, as now, supported Goukouni. Its attitude seems mainly to have been determined by the posture of the contestants in relation to Libya's claim to sovereignty over the Aozou Strip in the north, which is believed to contain uranium and other minerals, and which it has effectively controlled for a

FACTS ON CHAD

Land area: Chad occupies an area of 490,000 square miles, which makes it about five times as large as the United Kingdom, almost ten times the size of England and more than twice as large as France. It is the largest country to emerge from the break-up of French Equatorial Africa.

Population: It is estimated to number about 4,500,000 people. These are heavily concentrated in the south, with the northern half having a population of only about 88.000.

Economy: According to World Bank

three or four poorest countries in the Life expectancy: Its population at birth has a life expectancy of only 43 years, which is low even by the standards of the poorest nations.

Food: The average daily supply of calories per head is put at only about three quarters of the estimated requirement, and, by contrast, is only half that available in Libya.

Education: Only about 15 per cent of adults are literate, which is again among the lowest levels in the world. Health: World Bank statistics show statistics it had a per capita income in that there is only one doctor for every 1981 of $110, which ranks it among the 47,000 members of the population. that there is only one doctor for every Brief recent history: Having been part of French Equatorial Africa, Chad gained its independence in August 1960 with Ngarte Tombalhaye as its first president. For four years after independence the three northern regions of Borkou, Ennedi and Tibesti remained under French military administration. ● In 1965 rebellion broke out follownational loan". Since then there have been few periods of peace.

In 1973 Libya occupied the Aozou strip which is believed to contain deposits of uranium and manganese. In 1975 Tombalhaye was killed during a military coup.

• In 1980 civil war broke out. Despite efforts by the Organization of African Unity to stabilize the situation, President Goukouni signed a treaty of friendship with Libya and this led to up to 10,000 Libyan and Islamic Legion forces entering Chad, and Hissene Habré, who had been challenging the government was defeated.

In 1981 President Goukouni signed ing the imposition of an obligatory an agreement with Libya for a gradual merger of the two countries. This was never put into effect, but Libyan troops remained in Chad until the arrival of an OAU peace-keeping force.

THE WAR Everything hangs on

The present military position in Chad, as shown on the map, has come about after months of extremely fluid fighting.

circles as being one of e forces of President Habre and of Goukouni Queddes taking it in turns to overreach themselves.

Accurate information about the fighting is scarce, but the pattern of events seems to have been that the forces of President Habre suffered a heavy defeat on about February 23 after attacking Gouro on the fringe of the Aozou Strip, which he was intent on recovering from the Libyans.

This led to Habre's forces falling back over 400 miles to beyond Abeche, which was occupied by Goukouni's troops in early July. On July 10, Habre got behind Goukouni to recapture Oun Chalouba and, the next day,

Goukoum then fell back on Faya-Largean where he was driven out on July 30, only to recapture it on August 10 in a battle which was dominated by

Libyan forces. Now President Habre's forces, together with about 1,000 French paratroops, sent by President Mitter-rand technically there as advisers, and also perhaps up to 2,700 soldiers from President Mobutu's Zaire, have taken up defensive positions based on

Mitterrand

Abeche Salal, Moussoro and Mao.
This may hold out the possibility of a stalemate, though much will turn on the policies of President Gadaffi and his Libyan forces. An important factor in the fighting this month has been the centres of population (most of them merely collections of mud huts at oases) using Russian-built TU-22 Blinder bombers operating from Libyz.

These bombers have operated under cover of fighters, such as the Russian SU-22 Fifter and the Mirage F-1, but in the absence of forward air bases, Salal and Abeche are at the extreme limit of the range of these fighters.

The question now is whether the Libyan forces will attack Salal and Abeche, which would be expected to bring them into conflict with the French paratroops for the first time.

The position seems to be that it is essentially a Libyan decision, for the forces of Goukouni are thought to have been worn out by the fighting since February.

Although the Libyan aid to Goukouni originally took the form of men of the irregular Pan-African or Islamic Legion, it is thought that up to 5,000 regular Libyan troops have been in Charl since early this month. There have been reports that the Libyans may have with them as many as 500 tanks, but in European capitals this is thought to be an over-estimate, with the actual number being probably nearer to 100.

Any Libyan advance south will have to be confined to the two roads through Salal and Abeche, because the intervening terrain is unsuitable for modern mechanized forces. For the defending government and French forces it will be a prime aim to hold the important road junction at Abéché.

South of Salal the road passes through the wadi-Bahr el Ghazal which probably constitutes the best defensive feature available.

Good news, there's been a disaster

Evelyn Waugh once complained that the standard of book reviewing was slipping badly. In my young days, he sighed, we never gave a bad review to a book we had not read; nowadays they are breaking even that simple little rule. And Richard Ingrams, I am afraid to say, is now breaking that rule in the field of television, giving the thumbs down in the Spectator (my favourite weekly) to the conver-sation between John Stonehouse and Anthony Clare, even though he blithely admitted not having seen the programme. I did not see the programme cither, so I am sure it was excellent, if a little inconclusive.

But Richard Ingrams

promptly made amends by attacking the level of violence in off pictures and reports of crashes, disasters, bloodbaths, corpses and drownings. I agree entirely. He objected to the violence; I object almost more to the unnewsiness of it. Sudden death is hornbly important to those concerned - friends, relatives, neighbours - but horribly unimportant to the rest of us. If haif a dozen people are swept to their death by an Irish wave, or burnt in a Paris dance hall, or killed in a Spanish coach crash, the only interest we can possibly have is a remote voyeuristic onc. Yet such news" items are regularly given the number two or three position on news programmes. A few months ago I met a BBC cameraman who had been working in a regional centre and were dramatic and unusually detailed, he said. They had been offered to BBC news in London. Had anyone died? they wanted to know. No, came the answer. Not interested, said London. Another unwelcome development on the news is the increasing interest in filming mourning relatives at funerals-- widows are great and children are even better. After a token shot of the coffin or clergyman, the camera zooms in on the suffering faces of the nearest and dearest and stays there implacably, as if to make amends for not being there when the victim himself died.

TV news, which seems to feed been sent to cover a huge fire, of I have not seen the programme off pictures and reports of a factory, I believe. The pictures concerned in the last ten years I cannot recall having switched on the TV news more than three or four times, and I cannot believe that my life is any poorer for it; TV news seems to me to have all-the impact of reading the headlines of a better class provincial evening paper.

> none of my occasional dippings has made me change my mind. Still, we never get anywhere by moralistic sounding off, so I have a concrete suggestion to make. Instead of mixing up death and violence with the real news, why not give them their when the victim himself died.
> Lovely stuff, But news?
> I must admit that I am feature called Private Funeral, for which BBC and ITV

It does very little better than radio and a lot far worse, and cameras could film grief and distress to their heart's content. and to which those of us who love such things could turn without having to watch boring reports from Nicaragua and

The real violence and disaster could easily be given an evening becoming very popular, and it is slot as well, perhaps in a feature about time we made a proper called Blood and Guts, where job of the disasters we love so the apparent public taste for carnage could be satisfied with out anyone having to pretend it was "news". Here fuller treatment could be given to those disasters which the media love, especially coachloads of happy children who set out on a holiday and meet a terrible fate on a French motorway, which newspapers normally signal with the headline: "The Village that Died".

In fact - and I think this is a natural BBC idea - why not send a camera crew to go with a coachload of happy holiday-makers and prearrange a spectacular crash to be filmed specially for television? This style of fictional documentary is about time we made a proper job of the disasters we love so much, instead of arriving there hours afterwards.

In some quarters this might be called bad taste. For my own part, I see it only as a natural development of current TV news. If paying people to die is had taste, then it is not much worse than insisting we pay a licence to watch death on the news every night.

Rodney Cowton reports on the latest naval star at Dartmouth . . . a Wren

Down to the sea in skirts and supremacy has fallen to John Knox's monstrous regiment.

At the Britannia Royal Naval

College at Dartmouth, home of all that is best and brightest in naval tradition, a woman has for the first time carried off one of the top awards. At the end of July, Sarah Kahn, 23, alumnus of Cheshire Girls' Grammar School and Durham University, emerged as top cadet in competition with about 80 men and 13 other women who were in their first term at Dartmouth.

She won the Rowalian Trophy, which is awarded to the officer under training who displays the greatest leadership potential in his or her first term. Not only that, but she clearly did it with style, for she also won the Pauline Doyle Trophy which is awarded to the officer cadet of the Women's Royal Naval Service "showing the greatest prowess in parade ground training without losing her femininity". By prowess in parade ground training is meant the sergeant-major role of commanding a squad at square-bashing.

For the WRNS cadets, their first term at Dartmouth is also their last. They tend to be a few years older than the men at the college, mainly either from university or after serving in the ranks. Whereas the men will complete up to three terms, the women take up their first postings in the Royal Navy proper after one term - though not at sea.

That remains a male preserve. Sarah Kahn has emerged not merely as Third Officer Kahn, WRNS, but also with the awesome power (as the Americans say) to request that Tower Bridge be opened and closed, and with the thought that if her request is not met, Her Majesty's Board of Admiralty may well want to know the reason why. For in her first posting, which she takes up in October, she becomes Assistant Naval Lizison Officer in London. In that role she will responsible for looking after the arrangements for the 30 to 40 British and foreign naval ships which visit London every year. Among other things this will mean ensuring that Tower Bridge is raised when one of these vessels needs to pass through.

Sarah Kahn is just one of a number of women making an impact in the services. On August 1 The Times recorded that Lieutenant Jan Harper had emerged at the top of a basically masculine course for young officers in the Corps of Royal Engineers. Nine months ago Group Captain Joan Hopkins was appointed as the first woman commander of an RAF operational station, with responsibility for the air defence of a third of the United

Earlier this year Squadron Leader Brenda Palmer became the first female Senior Air Traffic Control Officer at a major flying station, RAF Wittering in Cambridgeshire. Last Year Captain Marion Randall came top of an officer's course in the Royal Army Ordnance Corps. In Second Lieutenant Sarah May, the Army has the first woman platoon commander of male Royal Army Ordnance Corps recruits Army Ordnance Corps recruits undergoing basic training (square bashing again). At Portland in Dorset in the headquarters of the Flag Officer Sea Training, the operations room has an entirely female watchkeeping team, made up of four WRNS officers and four leading Wrens.

Meanwhile, back at base in Whitehall there is Second Officer Penny Melville-Brown, who in 1981 was the first WRNS officer to come top of the mixed junior staff course at the Royal Naval College at Notwithstanding any impression that may be created by these examples, they are exceptions to the basic rule that the environment of the armed services is determinedly male, with the RAF having perhaps achieved the greatest integration of women. Pregnancy remains a phenomenon which none of the services finds easy to accommodate.

An interesting test of the service's attitude to women could arise quite soon. At the top of their profession, as directors of the Women's Royal

Army Corps and the Women's the possibility of one or more Royal Air Force are Brigadier Helen Meechie and Air Commodore Helen reach the returing age of 55.

But they cannot go further in the women's branches. The question is whether the services will break new ground by offering them senior appointments outside the female confines. Whatever happens, traditionalists may take comfort from the fact that there remain obstacles to the rise of military women.

At the Royal Military Academy at Sandhurst the men will shortly be joined by women, though there will be only a limited measure of integration, mainly in the academic side of training. Women will have a place in the passing out parade, however, though only in part of it, for the width of their skirts limits the size of their stride and prevents them keeping pace with the men's brisk marching.

But let there be no misunderstanding. The Princess Margaret director is 29 years old, a tone poem in shades of grey who says "welcome to our little house on the prairie" and explains that he moved from accountancy to medicine because be prefers "the people

No profit motives here. Absolutely not. They merely want to take the pressure off the National Health Service while providing each individual customer - or - patient with the best possible service - or - care and attention. Such imperative formalities out of the way. Sister says ahem to a jolly notice that says "No Smoking, lungs at work", and a wasp falls into the sweet sherry.

It's not like they're doing a job, he explained, it's more like a service, like in an hotel. He'd had to wait six months to have his tonsils out on the NHS, and, when he got in, there were no curtains at the windows and great lumps of plaster were hanging off the walls. Look, he says, what it all boils down to is I don't want to walk through corridors and have to see a lot of drips going in people. I don't want to mingle with the dying. It's depressing. Yeah, his wife said. It makes you feel sorry for them. Makes you feel you ought to go and put up pretty curtains for them.

The marketing director was especially pleased I'd met a milkman's wife on my rounds. It went to prove the Princess Margaret was not just for the idle rich. Three years ago only 7 per cent of Windsor possessed such prudence. Now, she said modestly, it had gone up to 14 per cent. However, there are beds lying empty in Princess Margaret, so much, much more marketing is required. Here is our physiotherapy department, we have a doctor in the house 24 hours a day, and over there's the delivery room and everywhere there are carpets, which is why it's all so quiet and peaceful. The catalogue of illness and injury among athletes at last week's world championships in Helsinki has heightened fears that and women may be training too hard for their own good. American 100 metre hopeful Evelyn Ashford's tragic fall in the final, and Cuban Alberot Juantereno's broken ankle add more weight to the concept that the physical pounding athletes force their bodies to endure is now so great that muscle tears and stress fractures result. Britain's Sebastian Coe didn't even make the games. He was stricken by a mystery virus. But, experts are now suggesting that his illness, too, may be the consequence of over training. Could it be that the stresses of training and competition depress the immune system, leaving athletes proue to infection?

Dr Lynn Fitzgerald, a research scientist in the department of immunology at St George's Hospital in London has been involved in one of the few studies of the effects of Competitive sports on the immune system. She is herself a long distance runner and holds the women's world 100 mile, 100 km and 200 km records. With the help of medical colleagues she looked at the effect running had on herself and five fellow endurance runners. Thankfully, she says, they found no dramatic deterioration in immune defenses during a race. But she adds it appears that the runners were generally less resistant to disease during the training season. This could be explained by the extremely high levels of the stress hormone cortisol released by the athletes' bodies after a heavy training session or competition. Dr

It tasted sick and sweaty. " I know it should be chilled", said the proprietress, "but our customers do not like it like that". At the Brasserie St. Quentin, Brompton Road, despite a very French ambience, a request to cool overwarm red wine was greeted with reluctance and Gallic smirks, and at 192, Kensington Park Road, a partner in the business came to argue the toss about my demand that a gently cooking claret be plunged in an ice-bucket. The final straw came at Carrier's, in Islington. "We do not chill any of the red wines - not even the beaujolais", I was told by a waiter who, again, knew they should. Such things never happened at Hintlesham Hall.

Edward Mortimer and Hazhir Teimourian on the coup in Iran 30 years ago today

From Mossadeq to Khomeini

"I owe my throne to God, my people, my army - and to you."
With these words, according to Kermit Roosevelt, the Shah thanked him, and through him the Central Intelligence Agency to which he belonged, for its part in restoring him to power 30 years ago today.

Roosevelt's exploit, recounted in his book Countercoup*, has become the locus classicus of a CIA coup. It was also beyond doubt a turning point in the history of modern Iran. Now that Iran is languishing under the gruesome medicval tyranny of Ayatollah Khomeini, it is hard to imagine the atmosphere which made Muhammad Mossadeq such a demonic figure for the British press and public of the early 1950s. Mossadeq was a secular nationalist who propounded for Iran the doctrine of "negative equilibrium". His argument was that in the past Iran had mortgaged its independence by trying to buy off the great powers with concessions ("positive equilibrium"). Instead it should safeguard independence by refusing concersions to all align and taking concessions to all alike, and taking control of its own resources.

He was thus no less opposed to giving the Soviet Union an oil concession in the north than he was to the control of Iran's main exportable resource (the oil of Khuzistan, in the south) by the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company. But his refusal to compromise over the nationalization of AIOC (the forebear of British Petroleum) won him the status of Britain's public enemy number one in the Middle East.

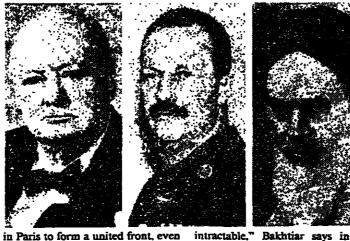

The septuagenarian, often bedridden figure, prone to burst into tears in the middle of his own speeches, was the constant butt of cartoonists and leader writers alike. He was, as The Times obituary recalled on his death 14 years later, prime minister and near-dictator of Persia in the disastrous period. 1951-53 ... the passionately nationalist statesman who, with many eccentricities of manner and method, led his country to the repudiation of its agreement with the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company, and to the very verge of national

For the Shah too, Mossadeq was "an utterly irrational being" but also - however improbably - a British agent; whereas, according to Kermit Roosevelt, "Dr Mossadeq had already attempted to expel his monarch, replacing him with him-self, and he had formed an alliance with the Soviet Union to achieve the

But for many Iranians today Mossaded has become the symbol of an Iran that might have been and (since hope springs eternal) might yet be: modern and progressive yet independent of the West, proud of its national traditions yet free of fanaticism. Recently, when groups opposed to Khomeini came together *McGraw Hill, 1979

royalists agreed that Mossadeq's should be the only picture hanging above the platform.

The man who insisted on this was Shapour Bakhtiar, whose premier-ship in January, 1979, marked a brief liberal interlude between the Shah and Khomeini. Bakhtiar, who was himself a junior minister in Mossadeq's last government, re-mains a stauch defender of the old man's memory. According to him, Mossadeq gave Iran "a lesson in democracy", was firmly committed to a constitutional monarchy rather than a republic, and never flirted with either the Soviet Union or the local communists.

Nor, Bakhtiar says, did he want "to throw the British out of Iran". He was willing to have a British manager for the oil company, keep on all British employees, and pay compensation for the British-built plant (though not for loss of profits).
It was Britain which showed itself intractable," Bakhtiar says in his book. Ma fidélité †

Indeed, while Mossadeq was determined to implement the nationalization law, the company, under its chairman. Sir William Frascr, was no less determined to thwart it, even urging the British government to take military action. The Americans under President Truman refused to support this, and Attlee after some hesitation ruled it out. Britain decided instead to starve Iran into submission by organizing a boycott of Iranian oil.

The other six international oil companies were willing to support AIOC in this, for fear that Mossaded's precedent might be followed in other oil-producing The boycott was backed by British military power but Mossadeq was also unlucky in his timing: there was no oil shortage, and the Iranian gap tAlbin Michel, Paris, 1982.

was easily filled by increased production elsewhere. Refusing to be browbeaten, Mossadeq rejected US attempts at mediation, but inside Iran, with no oil revenue coming in, the situation inevitably

By July, 1953, Mossadeq was at odds not only with the Shah but also with the traditional middle class, represented by the bazaar and the main religious leaders, both groups that had originally supported him. To overcome opposition from parliament (the majority of whose members were landlords, wealthy merchants or religious leaders) he resorted to a referendum without

The Times believed that this was the reason for the coup against him. ("The Shah, thanks to his western education, is a warm supporter of parliamentary institutions.") But in fact the planning for it was well advanced before the referendum. The initiative had come from Britain, where Churchill was by then in power, but the CIA had to take charge. Britain, having broken diplomatic relations, could no longer get its people into Iran.

The new Republican Administalthough with different motives. According to Roosevelt, "the British motive was simply to recover the AIOC oil concession. We were not concerned with that but with the obvious threat of Russian takeover."

That threat was not obvious to everyone. The Americans, then as now, were predisposed to see the hand of Moscow behind every spot of bother. They believed that Mossaded, knowingly or otherwise, was playing into the hands of the Tudeh (communist) Party, which was closely aligned with Soviet

It is true that the Tudeh grew stronger under Mossadeq's rule, and was allowed to carry on a strident compaign against the Shah and other powerful groups which were also opposed to Mossadeq. But when, after the first attempt at the coup had failed, Tudeh crowds poured into the streets, pulling down statues of the Shah, Mossadeq ordered the army to clear them out -thereby unwittingly facilitating the successful coup the following day.

If there was a communist danger arose from the chaotic internal situation in the country, which itself was caused largely by difficulties arising from the oil boycott. As in Chile 20 years later - and, who knows in Nicaragua tomorrow - the situation in which western countries felt obliged and entitled to intervene was one partly of their own making. The effect, while it may have encouraged Iran's economic development, was to distort its political development. In his determination to forestall another Mossadeq, the Shah prepared the ground for has spread to foreign affairs. In international sociology, too, quasiscientific jargon masks passionate partisanship. Instead of peer groups, we have nuclear equivalence, and countries are reduced to behaviouristic automata by doctrines of strategic determinism. Some inter-national sociologists are of the adamantine right, some of the hard left. In both cases, it is the human factor which is elided.

Take the arms reduction talks in Geneva. The arithmetic of the imbalance created by the Russians is persuasive. But there is a whole world above and beyond the nuclear facts of life. You do not have to be David Hume, or a philosopher at all, or particularly sceptical, to know that "facts" alone do not add up to much. Common sense tells us both that there can be no such thing as precise nuclear equivalence, and that there must be such a thing as a reliable sufficiency of weapons on

We need a greater readiness to criticize pure military reason, and to criticize pare mintary reason, and to illuminate the facts with a little historical imagination. May I therefore respectfully suggest that during the summer break President Reagan might lay aside for a moment his Intelligence digests and ask the CIA to procure for him instead good English translations of three Russian masterness? The process alone masterpieces? The prose alone would be an exquisite relief from Intelligence-speak, and there could be no better briefing for an

The first is Turgenev's A Sportsman's Sketches, the book that reputedly persuaded Alexander II to free the seris in 1861. It explains a lot about the Russians, old and new. Though many of them lived and were bartered like cattle until about a century ago, they are a very human lot. (Comparisons with Uncle Tom's Cabin are irresistible, but misleading.) Until very recently indeed, most were peasants. The national character is suspicious, boorish and overbearing. Russians can also be sentimental, metancholy, brilliantly original and highly cultivated.

Gogol's Dead Souls portrays the more negative types, and is ideal further reading for any negotiator. Chichikov, the anti-hero, declines to continue a game of chess with the cheat and bully, Nozdryov. "I haven't been cheating", protests Nozdryov, "and you can't refuse to go on. You must finish the game...
I'll make you play! You may have mixed up all the pieces, but I remember all the moves. We'll put them back as they were... No sir, you tell me straight, are you going to play or not?" said Nozdryov, advancing still closer. (A parable of recent superpower relations?)

Peasants - yes, but as Turgenev shows, with a streak of poetry, too. Bullies - certainly, but also, in another guise, permanent subversives. The hero of Dostoyevsky's

Sociology - once defined as "the science of volument obscurity" - has spread to foreign affairs. In inclined to listen to the answers, and distrusts any social or scientific structure at which "...one cannot put out one's tongue or make a long nose at on the sly". The Soviet public still read all this in their millions, a fact the President might remember when he despairs of Muscovite officialdom.

After reading more about the Russians, the President might like to meet one, or see the country. The most prominent recent American visitors to Moscow have been an 11year-old girl and a 91-year-old diplomat (Averell Harriman). During my own 20 years in diplomacy (spent mainly on communist affairs). I do not recall a moment when the East-West cultural gap has been greater. We badly need to put the whole of our relations in a wider and deeper perspective. They are the ones with the rigid, one-dimensional world view. We are supposed 10 have a broader vision.

The state of Soviet studies in American is not encouraging. Few of the next generation of American experts seem likely to bring George Kennan's depth of historical reflection to the issues. Few too will have met many Russians, though many will have strong views on them. Arid specialization and ideological intensity make a pernicious mixture.

I am not a faint-hearted European and I am not apologizing for Moscow. The point is not to melt the President's heart, or to pierce his political armour. Indeed in some areas closer acquaintance with homo russicus might lead one to take a tougher line. To get him out of Afghanistan, for example, you need not only some historical understanding of why he went there in the first place; but also to realize that there will be no negotiated withdrawal unless somebody sees to it that the resistance is properly armed. Noz-dryov would understand that

But we must differentiate. In oland "the worse, the better" would be the wrong motto. Uncontrolled pourrissement in Eastern Europe could be bad for both sides. We should think in national and historical, as well as ideological terms. Even a little peasant shrewd-

Moralistic oratory and technocratic diplomacy are not enough. There is no substitute for statesmanship. and the demand for it is growing.

Many sensible, conservative-minded people in the West are worried as much by its absence as by the nuclear numbers game - which itself reflects the failure of diplomacy. But they want leadership, not a crusade.

How a city shaped up to a thug and an aristocrat

By any normal standards, the competition was a difficult one: the design of a major public meeting place in a setting of European importance – the Mound, in Edinburgh. Most design competitions for projects to be built are for between buildings. Indeed, for the last 100 years, the ancient importance of the public forum, amphitheatre or agora has been devalued to that grey and unspecific term "the public open space". Many competitors saw this contest as a way of redressing the balance.

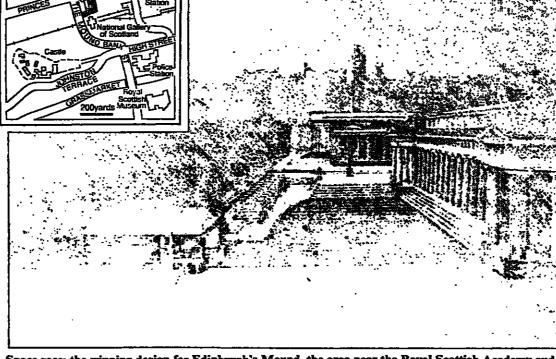

The competition was for the transformation of the roadway that used to run alongside the Royal Scottish Academy (William Playfair, 1832) and thence between the RSA and the National Gallery of Scotland (Playfair, 1845). It had been determined that the road would be closed in any case; but the resulting discussions led to a realization that ever since the Quality quit the Old Town (with its traditional meeting place at the market cross) for the New Town (with no meeting place at all) Edinburgh had been without a

This site could provide that focus, but not without difficulty. First, it is L-shaped; second, it is rigidly defined on one side by a boundary governed by an Act of Parliament. and third - and possibly most important - the site is entirely dominated by the two great art galleries, which are neo-classical monuments of world class; the RSA is a gigantic, muscular, Doric thug, whereas its neighbour, the National Gallery of Scotland, is a refined, feminine Edinburgh aristocrat. Both buildings are overlooked by the craggy wall of the Royal Mile, and in turn look down upon Princes Street and the New Town. These constraints leave little chance for creative innovation. Furthermore, whether competitors decided to do nothing, or the minimum, or produce a major building, all had to be contained within the budget of £500,000. barely more than that required to pave the sloping site in stone: a critical point, since the most imaginative schemes were those which exploited the changes in level. Those who decided to submit a major building proposal had then to determine whether they respecied the existing character of the site, or whether they fought it. One entrant

Space race: the winning design for Edinburgh's Mound, the area near the Royal Scottish Academy and the National Gallery of Scotland.

expressed his dissatisfaction with the project by entering a live scheme: the site plan was returned with the galleries covered with uncooked pork chops, sausage and black puddings; with salad heaped between. The panel members, while holding their noses (for this was an early entry, and by the time the technical assessment panel had reached it, the food had matured) concluded that the entry proposed to pile 30ft of garbage over the entire site: as such, it did not meet the competition conditions.

Submissions fell into three main groups: those who simply offered a landscape design: those who used water, or those who produced major building structures. The winning entries were all in the first category, of which more later. However, a significant number used water on the site to soften its hard, rectangular and Calvinist outlines. Such entries included ideas for fountains, waterfalls, streams, lochs, curling ponds, skating ponds, ornamental gardens and winter gardens. Most were beautifully presented, but none avoided the difficulties of future maintenance, clearance of rubbish, and whether or not the presence of water might inhibit the use of those spaces for other purposes.

However, the winning student entry - commended for its sheer panache - proposed a loch running along the entire side of the Royal Scottish Academy, satisfying the requirement for access to load and unload drawings into the gallery by a Service ralt grottos, tents, gazebos, pergolas and high-tech metal structures to under-ground glazed-roofed shelters. The jury was convinced by none of these, since for the entire scheme to remain within the budget, such structures would have to be completed in cheap materials requiring significant future maintenance. In any case, the neo-neo classical buildings rarely matched the quality of the existing ones on

The sponsors of the competition, the Property Services Agency and Lothian Regional Council (who together own the land), wantedto ensure that all possible opposition to the winning proposal should, as far as possible, have been eliminated in advance. So they appointed the Royal Incorporation of Architects in Scotland to act as agents to organize the competition, with the require-ment that everybody with an interest in the site be consulted during the competition process, so as to avoid the possibility of the winner being opposed by the massed bands of classical conservationists. (The problems of the competition for the National Gallery extension in Trafalgar Square were very much in their minds.)

The method adopted was the organization of detailed technical assessment, before the jury meeting, the results of which were made available to the jury as guidance. The jury comprised Professor Sir Robert Grieve (former chairman of the Royal Fine Art Commission for Scotland), Professor Richard Mac-Cormac (architect), and Alistair Moffat (arts correspondent, Scottish Television, and former director of the Edinburgh Festival Fringe).

They were unanimous in their choice of the winning scheme by Allies and Morrison, of London (Allies trained at Edinburgh University). The design consists of a few simple ideas: the ground level at Princes Street is carried up into the centre of the site, and paved in stone: then, to take account of the rising ground, there is a flight of steps up to a higher platform which runs between the Royal Scottish Academy and the National Gallery, which will be paved with granite setts. The eastern boundary of the site is determined by the Playfair steps, which, as a route, is now carried right down to Princes Street, ending up through a new, pedimented information kiosk.

Between this route and the lower square is space for a row of shops or booths, offering permanent accom-modation for the current clutter of ice-cream vans etc. The scheme is austere and pure: yet it was Moffat's view that it offered a wide variety of opportunities for the performing arts and would be in great demand during the summer season.

All that remains now is for the promoters to take the scheme to the next stage, with a view to clearing outstanding permissions and beginning construction. Once built, it will no longer be difficult for people to name a meeting place when wishing to meet friends in Edinburgh: they will simply be able to say: "I'll meet you at the Mound".

work left on the harvest field for unskilled visitors to do. We used to stook until quite recently up here in darkest Ayrshire. Then come out the next morning to observe with chagrin that the wind from the Atlantic had blown all the stooks down, and then start again and put them all up again. Back aches and hands sting with remembered thistles even to write it. Nostalgia, nostalgia. Where are the harvests of yesteryear? After a week or two of that game. we pitchforked the sheaves on to carts, put them all back again when they couped, and rode in triumph on top of the swaying load, back to the steading, and forked all the sheaves up again into the shed. Even after the combines had penetrated the hill farms up here, there were still bales to load and unload. We sweated gravy as the stack grew towards the roof of the barn, but when things grew too hot the elevator could always be relied on to break down. Now the mechanical bale-grabbers have ar-rived, and vast bales shaped like wiss rolls that no human, however willing can lift by hand. "Dry August and warm doth harvest no harm" rhymed Tom Tusser in Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry in 1580. August is preternaturally warm and dry. The harvest looks quite good. But there is nothing that amateurs can do to help. And now the polis even say that it is illegal for children to ride home on top of the loader bales, in the few farms that still build loads of old fashioned bales. There is an ancient pleasure gone.

Harvest home has been going on for a long time. And it is difficult not to feel that it has changed for the worse with the efficiency of mechanization, in the same way that it is difficult not to feel that the countryside has changed for the worse with the great prairies created by rooting out old hedges and ditches to accommodate the great machines. Your old harvest was the social and sociable event of the year, with the field full of helpers and spectators getting in the way, small boys with ambitious catapults waiting for the rabbits to make a break for it from the shrinking island of standing corn, old men reminiscing about heroic harvests of their youth, the professionals cutting by scythe and then binder drawn by look at the harvest paintings and

The harvest truly is plentious this read the harvest poetry and memoirs year, but the labourers are few. Now to see there was a kind of joy in it.

The big machines have taken the mechanized, there is no unskilled backbreaking toil out of it and an armony to be the set of the labourers. The big machines have taken the backbreaking toil out of it and are far quicker and more efficient. But they have also taken away the sense of communal triumph in getting a roaring harvest home. The drivers of the combines and the trucks wear earphones playing continual pop. But let us not repine or blub about the good old harvest days, chaps. New country skills are replacing the vanishing arts of stooking and scything, and building loads and stacks that do not coup, and thatching. At the Dumfries and Lockerbie Agricultural Show last week, there was no sheath - crossing contest over a bar as in the pole vaults. But there was a large and popular class of tractor competitions which the local boys drove monstrous machines around an obstacle course, picked up telegraph poles with their fork lifts as delicately as lesser men pick up chipolata sausages with a fork, backed between narrow gate posts, and deposited their loads without spilling a drop water from the milk churns balanced on their trailers. I made my excuses and did not have a Farming will never be wholly mechanized as long as there are animals down on the farm. The new imported big breeds, the Limousins and Simmentals, and Charolais (familiarly called Charlies up here) made a noble show at Dumfries beside the local Galloways and Ayrshires. The hills are alive with the sound of bleeting lambs for we have been spaning the flock, separating the lambs from their ewes and dipping the best ones primrose vellow for the markets.

Visiting townees overcome their modesty about lifting up the grotty tails of several hundred lambs to determine their sex: not always as obvious as you would imagine at that age. They call a rigg (a male with only one testicle) a "chaser" up here, let his tail grow as a badge of distinction and keep him as an energetic curiosity to encourage the tups in their work. One falls into the dipping tank in over-enthusiasm and comes out yellow. The Notting Hill Beagles are always in the way, and majestically cursed.

Who was it who said that you cannot make a man by standing a sheep on its hind legs but by standing a flock of sheep in that position you can make a crowd of men? Compared with the flock of silly tourists on the London Underground, the wild sheep of darkest Ayrshire are civilized and sedate and bright yellow.

THE SOVIET CHALLENGE: II

A major fallacy in Western assessments of Soviet intentions leaders are basically similar to politicians in any country. In Western democracies politicians of Afghanistan. come and go; the electorate. prefers pragmatic government which benefits citizens as individuals rather than the enforcement of ideological solutions for the good of the state. In the USSR continuity of leadership is all-important. The legitimacy of the regime has no firmer foundation than the seizure of power in 1917 by a minority party which promised a glorious future for mankind after world communism was attained - an "inevitable process" which the party nonetheless had a duty to Individual Soviet leaders have been denounced - some even murdered - by those who took power from them. But Lenin, his body preserved in the Mausoleum on which his successors review their forces, lives on as the main inspiration of Soviet foreign policy. Previous leaders may have made mistakes, but the party and the doctrine must be regarded as infallible or six decades of Soviet rule and all the sufferings of the masses building socialism will have been in vain. Even if they have personal doubts about the wisdom of spreading their political system the means at their disposal, the men in the Kremlin dare not give expression to their misgivings for fear of losing power to their rivals.

Continuity is particularly noticeable in Soviet foreign policy. The imperialism of the Russian tsars has given way to a Soviet empire expanding under the guise of bringing socialism to the workers of the world. This is one aspect of their predecessors' rule which new leaders have not condemned. The same Khrushchev who de-Stalinized and freed thousands of political prisoners preserved Stalin's conquests. crushing the Hungarian rising and executing Prime Minister Imry Nagy for "treason". When he backed down in the Cuban crisis of 1962 he lost his post. The same Brezhnev who in the heyday of detente drank champagne with President Nixon and kissed President Carter presided

Prague Spring, expanded Soviet is to assume that the Soviet influence in Third World countries with the help of Cuban forces, and ordered the invasion

The Andropov who is protrayed by some as a liberal intellectual pursuing a defensive foreign policy was himself in Hungary helping to suppress the 1956 rising and as head of the KGB from 1967 played a central role in the Brezhnev strategies of internal repression and foreign expansion which continue today under his own leadership. The head of the Central Committee International Department, Boris Ponomarev, and the Foreign Minister, Andrei Gromyko, both have decades of experience, uninterrupted since they began their careers under Stalin.

The present Soviet leaders have caused too much misery to be described as good men; yet their misdeeds stem not from personal wickedness, but from their obedience to a system unrestrained by popular control, a system which has brought them honours and privileges. They are not the men to renounce the beliefs of a lifetime or to recant on their aims of achieving world communism under Moscow control. The younger careerists who hope to become the leaders of tomorrow provide the information and advice which conform to the Kremlin world view, not original ideas about reaching a peaceful compromise with the West.

It is not fully realised in the West that the Kremlin's unchanging and unquestioning hostility is not only directed at the negative side of life under capitalism but also at the positive freedoms and consumer delights which exercise such a dangerous fascination for those under communist rule. This is not the traditional threat of a hostile nation seeking selfa system which compels human qualities in the service of a political machine. Just as the democracies failed to believe that Hitler meant what he said until he proved it with Blitzkrieg further the best interests of and concentration camp, many now prefer to listen to what, long term hold most promise of some smiling Soviet official tells, a secure and productive peace.

over the suppression of the a Western journalist rather than believe the doctrine of the leaders themselves or the evidence of their own eyes.

They argue that Afghanistan was already a socialist country in the Soviet sphere of influence; that its people were very backward and will benefit from education in the USSR and other forms of fraternal help. They say that Nicaragua suffered under a brutal dictatorship and is better suited by Soviet-style socialist development than the evils of US economic exploitation. If Cuba too has political prisoners, they represent temporary sufferings on the path to a greater good. It is argued that one cannot make an omelette without breaking eggs. But the road to world communism is thick with broken eggshells and we have yet to see the first omelette.

The West cannot afford to wait for the next time Soviet strategists seize an opportunity to extend the "socialist community" - whether in Iran, Baluchistan, or elsewhere. A feeble reaction to the use of force is no deterrent to its use on another occasion. So far the West's response has generally been delayed, divided and ineffective, yet on the occasions in the past when governments have weighed the risks and opted for a firm stand, they succeeded in restraining the USSR. In 1946 after strong Western pressure Soviet troops withdrew from northern Iran, and the pseudoautonomous Kurdish and Azerbaijani republics set up by Moscow collapsed. A firm line proved justified during the Berlin airlift of 1949 and the Cuban crisis of 1962. The West helped Tito counter Stalin's threat to Yugoslavia and more recently the promise of support encouraged Egypt and Somalia to reject the Soviet presence. It is time to develop 2 coherent response to the Soviet aggrandisement, but the threat of challenge. Of course both sides must make every effort to scale beings to suppress their human down the monstrous weapons which threaten global destruction. But it is no less important to preserve those values of decency and freedom which people everywhere and in the

FIVE-YEAR RAILWAY TIMETABLE

Few commercial organizations modest one at that. A further that large parts of railways are of any size could have kept to a 17,000 jobs will go and labour uneconomic but essential to a live year plan drawn up in 1978, nor would many care to publish such detailed plans now. Yet British Rail, as a state industry, was forced into this somewhat academic performance again yesterday. Its past efforts, as the Comptroller and Auditor General has pointed out, have made its commuter timetables seem a model of accuracy by comparison, not least because of the recession and strikes. It is just as hard for railway managers to monitor their complex and interlinked mix of social and commercial businesses as it is for the Department of Transport.

Today British Rail is committed to forecasts for the year 1988, when it does not even know who will be its chairman next month, nor whether the government will approve important projects for main line electrification, let alone what schemes Whitehall advisers have in store for railway massive subsidies if only they organization or for introducing private capital.

Under such conditions of uncertainty, it is hardly surprising that the Corporate Plan 1983-88 is little more than a airports. Real planning can only productivity will rise by just 7 pattern of living created over per cent. Of the two largest past decades. divisions required to run on commercial terms, freight is expected to meet its target but inter-city services on the other hand will only break even, though British Rail hopes that a study now under way will find the missing profits.

This package, while hardly dramatic, is both logical and credible. British Rail has made substantial strides recently in getting to grips with its problems and re-organizing its structure so as to give its managers realistic financial and operating targets. The Corporate Plan adds to this new realism by concentrating on cost savings without exaggerated hopes about an upturn in business.

There is still a lingering feeling at the back of many minds that the railways could do without were run efficiently or that there is some magic way of transforming railway finances in much the same way as duty-free sales pay for the losses incurred in running discussion document and a begin when it is acknowledged

Tight control of subsidies and the external financing limit remains the prime method of keeping pressure on British Rail to improve its efficiency. Subsidies should be as specific and detailed as possible. But there is also a strong case for experiments to introduce private capital and in particular some element of competition where possible to act as a monitor for British Rail's performance on finance and services and to help provide investment.

Important strategic changes. such as splitting off parts of the system or separating track from operations should certainly be considered. Private enterprise could help a more imaginative approach to property development on stations. If possible private concerns should be encouraged to run separable commercial lines, such as the new Victoria to Gatwick line and even to tender for subsidized routes. But such moves should concentrate on improving rather than sniping at the railway

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Saving Mr Steel from his friends

From Mr Colin Darracott

Sir. Your report (Angust 17) that David Steel may resign the leader-ship of the Liberal Party if the constitutional amendment on control of the manifesto contents is passed by the Liberal Party As-sembly quotes unnamed "friends" of his as evidence.

The media, and the party internally, have recently been awash with Mr Steel's "friends" and friends of Mr Steel's "friends" making allegations of this nature whenever these matters are discussed. They have preferred to take refuge in dark hints and veiled threats, rather than to honestly discuss the issues involved.

These issues, quite simply, are how a democratically-run party, the first to elect its leader by the votes of all members, shall arrive at the content of its manifesto. The effect of the amendment would give final authority to the standing committee of the party, of which the leader is a member.

Thus if the leader strongly disagrees with an item of party policy he would no doubt be able to persuade the committee to omit it from a manifesto. If he could not he would hardly be likely to be able to convince the electorate on the point. But he would have to argue his case, be heard to argue, and give his reasons. Thus the rest of the party, while perhaps not agreeing with him, would at least know why he had taken a position. This is very different from the present case, where policy on, for example, animal welfare and cruise missiles has been brushed aside apparently by personal dictate.

It would also spread responsibility for the manifesto's content, and spread the range of party opinion which contributes to it. This year, all the discontent about the programme for the recent general election has fallen on Mr Steel. If the whole of an elected body were involved that responsibility would be spread, and the main debate could be on issues and not personalities.

Those of us who support this amendment wish to openly debate the issues it raises. In the absence of any word from Mr Steel himself, his friends" would do well to join that debate, and to abstain from childish threats.

Yours sincerely COLIN DARRACOTT, Chairman, London Region Liberal Party, The Liberal Centre, 30 St James Road, SE16. August 17.

Future of the Alliance

From Mr Peter Birkby

Sir, Philip Webster (article, August 10) seems to have been talking to people who see some sort of divergence between David Owen's views on candidate selection for the European elections and those of SDP members at grass roots level. This is an analysis not borne out by my own experience. I believe that oint selection would be in the interests of neither the SDP nor the Liberal Party. With joint selection the vast majority of candidates selected would be Liberals, not necessarily because they were the best candidates, rather because they had the backing of people whose party loyalties had developed over years and decades. Liberals would tend to vote for Liberals far more than Social Democrats would vote for Social Democrats. The two suggested methods of joint selection would have the same results. If all members were invited to a meeting Liberals would outnumber Social Democrats by an average of three to one, and unless the SDP candidate was head and shoulders above the rest the result would be a foregone conclusion.

If an electoral college was set up, so that equal numbers voted from each party, the result would be the same, due to the relative strength of party loyalties.

Most Liberals, I believe, accept these arguments only too well. When factions of the Liberal Party like the Association of Liberal Councillors, which was once so hostile to the SDP, suddenly reverse their positions, they let the cat out of Those Social Democrats who favour a quick merger also realize the implications, but are prepared to pay the price. The vast majority of Social Democrats, however, I believe will not be prepared to pay the price and will say so loud and clear at the council in September.

To project an Alliance which was nothing more than an extended Liberal Party could mean that we all suffer the same fate as the Liberal Party of 1979. Yours sincerely.

PETER BIRKBY, 32 Park Grove, Bradford 9. West Yorkshire. August 10.

Missing the point

From Squadron Leader R. G. Burr (Retd)

Sir, An example of the type of notice referred to by Mr Yorke in today's issue, (August 9) was an inscription which up until the formation of the NHS appeared chiselled into a stone band around a hospital on the edge of Clapham Common. It read: "The South London Hospital for Women Supported by Voluntary Contributions.

However, I noticed at some time after 1948, that the word "Women" had been removed and the word "for" had been extended by the addition of "merly", which saddened me somewhat. Yours faithfully,

R. G. BURR. 7 The Slade, Lamberhurst. Kent August 9.

Doubts on new policy for the Rhine

From General Sir David Fraser Sir, In your article, "Rethink on the Rhine" (August 17) you propose: i. That the West German Army assume responsibility for the operational sector of Allied Command Central Europe now entrusted to the British Army. 2. That the British Corps in Northern Army Group should be held as a tactical reserve" and should, in some way to be determined, be reduced in size.

3. That Headquarters, British Army of the Rhine, should be abolished "with further savings in headquarters costs", at least I think that is what you propose, in your reference to "no one-over-one relationship between HQ BAOR and HQ First British Corps"; although since you link this point to the likely loss (under your policy) by Britain of the Northern Army Group Com-mand - a completely different issue - the line of reasoning is unclear.

I believe the advantages you suggest for this sort of policy are illusory, while the difficulties are very real. You have referred to some of the latter but, I suggest, greatly underestimated them. To take a few headines:

Financial: You base your suggestions upon the need for savings. I doubt if you would achieve them. There would, under any version of your plan, have to be large-scale relocation of troops - presumably British and certainly German. The cost of this is likely to be immense; and it is a presumption of your proposition that Germany bear a larger part of this cost. But, leaving aside the dubious question of persuading the Federal Republic to your point of view, the cost to the British Defence budget would also be huse. I very much doubt if these capital costs could be balanced by any imaginary savings from a reduction in size of 1 (British)

Strategic: You refer to there being "no operational logic in the strategy of forward defence in West Germany, which is persisted with for political reasons, and you talk of the tactical rigidities imposed on Nato's military thinking by the forward defence strategy", and of the British Army "guarding every forward inch of a sixty-three kilometre front". If it really did so, it does not seem an immense price to pay for peace in Europe, but does The Times seriously believe that the West German population could be persuaded to pay for a defence to trade space for time, and base its declared strategy thereon? Or that defence of its territory?

Does The Times seriously contend that any Western European nation - or coalition - has the ability Nato could live with a military strategy so patently at odds with its political objectives? The "tactical rigidities" - and they are not as rigid as you suggest - are political realities. Of course they produce problems, but the problems are not insuperable.

Political: You argue the advantages of West Germany assuming a stronger military role. I believe you entirely underestimate the difficultes of this - not least in Germany itself. But why do you suggest to your readers that the West German contribution is not already very strong? The Bundeswehr has four powerful Army Corps, a very large eserve, and - when I last compar the figures - more tanks than the German Army which invaded Russia in June, 1941. Talk of a "junior partner" (in terms of land forces, at least) is misleading.

Space prevents comment on the administrative implications of your proposals, but suffice it to say that all the national and logistic responsibilities of HQ BAOR could not possibly be discharged by the staff of a forward Corps.

Finally, may I say that my own experience of Nato convinces me that any proposals on the lines you suggest would be regarded with astonished concern within the Alliance. The British Army of the Rhine - with much of it in the forward areas - is exactly that "evidence of commitment" without which no Continental alliance could endure, and no British participation be respected. You make much of "operational burden sharing", and in that connexion say that the British contribution should be concentrated in the maritime area. I agree - and it is. Virtually the entire Royal Navy is assigned to Nato - by far the largest European navy, and rightly so. Our contribution on land one Corps of regular troops, from a nation of over sixty million people - is, believe me, not regarded by our allies as overwhelming in terms of size, but it is regarded as extremely important. Yours faithfully, DAVID FRASER,

Buildings on the list

From Mr Richard J. Griffith Sir. The remit of the new Historic Buildings Commission is wider than your editorial (August 11) suggests. its principal task is "to secure the preservation of ancient monuments and historic buildings situated in

The 400 buildings directly in its care are only the tip of the iceberg: even if one added all grade 1 listed buildings they would together amount to fewer than 6,000 properties, or barely 2 per cent of all buildings over which there is statutory "heritage" control. That total is about 283,000 buildings and will soon be substantially increased by the resurvey now in progress. The commission can advise the Secretary of State on the administration of all these protected buildings.

Saving youth hostels

From Councillor L. J. F. Body and mind

From Dr Thomas Price Sir, Your editorial of August 10 takes the medical profession to task for its alleged over-emphasis on high

The list will be published by the Fellowship as an indexed reference book in the autumn.

The list will contain the replies we have had from schools, colleges, universities, polytechnics, insti-tutions and charitable trusts, as well as those from many firms manufac-

Risks in new bread rules policy which did not assume forward

From Dr Walter Yellowlees and others

Sir, We write to draw attention tothe proposed new flour and bread regulations, particularly to the following two points:

1. Around 1935 the deficiencies of white flour were recognized. Regulations were passed making it mandatory to put back certain of the vital nutrients extracted during milling, eg, iron, calcium, thiamine and nicotinic acid. It is now proposed to abandon this requirement.

Either the Government was wrong then or it is wrong now. White bread is a staple of the poor. If the Government interferes with the nutritive value of the white loaf. it should be warned of the risk it takes with the health of the poor and elderly sections of the population.

It is known that the thiamine requirement is directly related to the carbohydrate intake: ie, Vitamin B1 is needed to cope with starch. David Turnham, a biochemist who has worked with the Department of Health, has said that 85 per cent of the elderly population will probably have a lower intake of thiamine than the DHSS recommended intake if thiamine is not replaced. Doyle and Crawford have said that 62 per cent of the mothers in families they are investigating in Hackney will be at risk if thiamine is not replaced.

2. The proposed new regulations will allow bakers to manufacture a. wholemeal loaf to which they have added the emulsifiers, oxidants, stabilizers, etc, at present allowed in the manufacture of white bread. By long tradition, and indeed by law, wholemeal bread has consisted of the ground-up wheat berry, yeast, sait and a little oil or fat, with caramel permitted.

If the large plant bakers now wish to cash in on the fashion for wholemeal bread, by all means let them, additives and all. Far better people eat wholemeal bread with additives than white bread with. additives. But they must not be allowed to call it "wholemeal". The public must be able to distinguish. between a loaf which contains. additives and one which does not.

The old bakers' term "wheatmeal" is due to be abolished under the new regulations. Why not present it to the plant bakers as aname for their new loaf? "Wheatmeal" for a wholemeal loaf with permitted additives, "Wholemeal for the traditional wholemeal and nothing but the wholemeal?

Cut in arts support

August 3.

From Mr Denis Mahon, FBA Sir, Mrs Rupert Hambro justifiably argues (August 11) that in the present circumstances of stringency more should be done to enlist financial support for the arts from the private sector and points out that mere recommendations from the Government to this end fail to meet the case.

There were only two sentences relating to future arts policy in the Conservative manifesto issued in May. They were: "We shall keep up the level of Government support, including a fair share for the regions. We shall also examine ways of using the tax system to ecourage further growth in private support for the arts and the heritage". Leaving aside any comments on the ways in which the first commitment might be reconciled with events during July, " it is evident to many that the second commitment becomes all the more crucial just because of those events.

Unless something is actually achieved in the way of further fiscal incentives, exhortations are unlikely to prove really effective. But provided that genuine progress in this regard is seen to be made, then Mrs Hambro's suggestion of a "well-conceived public relations campaign" would become extremely pertinent.

There have been certain indications that the new Arts Minister may have been thinking seriously along these lines. Many will hope that in the autumn he will do battle for, and deliver, the necessary prerequisites for a constructive policy designed to win from private sources much greater support in the future for the arts and the heritage. Yours faithfully, DENIS MAHON, 33 Cadogan Square, SW1.

OBITUARY

SIR NIKOLAUS PEVSNER

Art historian and chronicler of buildings of England distinguished art historian. writer, and lecturer, and outstanding interpreter and recorder of English architecture home in Hampstead after a long ilness. He was 81.

He won the admiration of scholars all over the world and of all shades of opinion through the breadth of his knowledge on these subjects and the quality of his writing. In all this he combined deep learning, sound judgment and quiet humour. One of his most valuable characteristics at a time of conflicting theories was his good humoured refusal to be either bluffed or stampeded by extremists on either side, academic, preservationist or modernist, or to be shocked at the progress of events.

He had a great capacity for getting down to essentials in any hase of art and for distinguishing between what was inevitable in the circumstances and what was likely to blow over as a passing fashion. His judgments were often refreshingly uncon-ventional for the simple reason that they were consistent. He could study mediaeval, baroque, Georgian or Victorian design with the same acuteness and impartiality. Because he was deeply founded in the history of the past he was able to follow contemporary devel-

In 1934 Pevsner came to England, a refugee from Nazi Germany. He had specialized in English art and architecture and already knew more about its history than many in this country. He held a research fellowship at Birmingham University for one year, where he first met Sir Gordon Russell and became his adviser on modern furniture; Pevsner was thus partly responsible for some of the better trends in furniture in the 1930s.

> Pevsner lectured well and often, and in several languages. His first public talk in England was on "English Art: How it strikes a foreigner. What struck a foreigner in the best English painting he said, was English harmony, the portraits of Gainsborough were all quiet and harmonious like the English countryside. He later returned to and elaborated on the theme in his Reith Lectures on "The Englishness of English Art", given in 1955.

WAI SCIVICE.

In a lecture on Continental Art delivered at the Royal Society of Arts in 1935 he broached a subject in which he showed especial interest, the influence of William Morris, not only in England but on the Continent, together with that of architects like Mackintosh and Voysey. This was a theme of his book Pioneers of the Modern Movement from Morris to Gropius, first published in 1936, which arrived at the conclusion, novel perhaps to many people in this country, that the modern idea of architecture and industrial design had an origin in English thought and effort at the end of the last century and the beginning of the present one.

In 1942 he became a lecturer at Birkbeck College, and the titles of some lectures that he gave during one week there show how wide ranging were his interests. They included "Iconography in French Cathedrals", "William Blake", "Baudelaire and Dramatic Criticism" and "The Bauhaus". In 1959 he became Professor of the History of Art at Birkbeck, and he remained there until his retire-ment in 1969, when he became Emeritus Professor. But Birkbeck was not the only scene of his academic activities. From 1949 to 1955 he was Slade Professor of Fine Art at Cambridge, as well as a Fellow academic role. Before he left Germany he had published in 1928 a study of Baroque Architecture in Leipzig and (1927-1930) Italian Painting from the end of the Roccoo. In England, following his Pioneers. he wrote An Enquiry into Industrial Art in England. (1937), which showed that he was capable of pointed criticism as well as appreciation. It gave a far from glowing picture of the artistic quality of British manu-factures (excepting for such things as tweeds and sporting equipment). Of more general and practical importance were his account of man shaping space", in An Outline of European Architecture, first published as a Pelican book in 1942; and his series of super guide-books The Build-ings of England which appeared from 1951 onwards. In these with omnivorous appente and discriminating taste, he aimed to record every notable product of architecture from the distant past to the present day, county by county, the two volumes on London alone being remarkable in the ground they covered.

The thorough-going manner in which Pevsner set about the realisation of this aroused an equal amount of astonishment and praise. The task, which involved visits to some 30.000 buildings, was begun in 1949 and ended 21 years later with the inspection of a building in Staffordshire.

Pevsner became a foundermember of the William Morris Society in the 1950s and in 1963 he became chairman of the Victorian Society, which he had Cambridge, as well as a Fellow of St John's; and in 1968-69 he Victorian Society had on the was Slade Professor at Oxford.
As editor and author Pevsner was no less active than in his self confronted by vigorous supporters of some extravagant product of 19th-century capitalism, who suspected that he would have preferred it replaced by something more like the Bauhaus. They were often wrong, for Pevsner was the first to admit that time could modify some of his views on modern architecture. He also revised certain earlier judgments on 19th-century buildings gleefully quoted by would-be demolish-

Peysner had a wide aquaintanceship among young people. They soon found, like his other friends that the image of a desiccated Middle European professor who analysed the beauty out of art and architecture was completley false. Peysner loved a joke, not least at his own expense, and though normally precise in diction occasionally startled his friends with a sudden lapse into cockney or toffee-nosed English. He would show equal interest in hearing about a building unfamiliar to him whether in Kensington or Katmandu; the somewhat owi-like features would assume a look of concentration and out would come the little notebook. His stamina was phenomenal; walks of 12 miles or more in search of a building were nothing to this non car-driver. There were stories of guided tours of medieval cathedrals lasting nine

Among the positions Pevsner held were membership of the Royal Fine Art Commission, the Historic Buildings Council, the National Council of Art and Design, the Advisory Board on Redundant Churches and the Advisory Board to the Ministry of Housing and Local Govern-ment. He was honoured by many societies, and was one of the very few non-architects to be awarded the Royal Gold Medal of the Royal Institute of British Architects.

He was appointed CBE in 1953, and received a knighthood in 1969 for services to art and architecture.

An indefatigable worker, he

Law Report August 19 1983 Court of Appeal

Duress defence to contempt of court

Regina v "K"

Before Lord Justice Watkins, Lord Justice Kerr and Mr Justice Kenneth Jones [Judgment delivered August 18]

Duress could be a defence to an allegation of contempt of court where a witness refused to giveevidence. It was also important that the alleged contemnor should be given the opportunity by the judge of being legally represented. The Court of Appeal (Criminal Div. ision) so held, allowing an appeal against conviction by the defendant, who for his own protection was identified only as "K".

Mr Michael de Navarro assigned by the Registrar of Criminal Appeals for the defendant; Mr Patrick Whelon for the Crown.

LORD JUSTICE WATKINS, delivering the judgment of the court, said that the defendant, who was 25 years of age and came from a respectable family, had a bed criminal record. He had been dismissed from the Army and had convictions for offences of dis-honesty and for driving offences. For the offences he had commit-led most recently he was sentenced to two years' imprisonment at 22. 1982. He had been serving that sentence at various prisons, including Wandsworth and Camp Hill. His stay in prison had been lengthened by 86 days loss of and by a further term of 3 months

Crown Court. Isle of Wight. by His Honour Judge McCreery, QC, who found him to be in contempt of court for refusing to give evidence in the trial of "N", who was charged with assulting him.

The judge had to direct the jury to acquit "N". Before doing that he dealt with the defendant, who was not offered legal representation before being found guilty of contempt and sentenced. The defendant was brusquely prevented from giving an explanation and intimidated from saying anything as to why he should not be sentenced.

The facts were that in February, 1983, the defendant was in Camp Hill prison in the Isle of Wight. So was "N", a man with a formidable criminal record with convictions for burglary, robbery, causing actual bodily harm and wounding with intent. The two men served prison and in a close aumosphere such as that quite often prisoners quarrelled over trivialities. The defendant and "N" either bumped into or brushed against each other, and "N" took grave exception. When they next met there was a very serious altercation ending with "N" slashing the detendant's face

After that incident, the defendant made a detailed statement to the police of what had taken place and stated that he was willing to go to

with a knife and wounding him very court and give evidence. The police the defendant but he never received it. "N" trial took place on July 6, 1983, and the defendant was taken to court from Albany prison where he was told he was to give evidence for the defence in another trial. He was taken by surprise when he called upon to enter the witness box in the trial of "N".

The defendant had already made clear that although initially he had said he would give evidence in the trial of "N" he had changed his mind and would not testify to having been wounded. That was cause at a number of prisons he had been threatened not only by "N", but also by others on his behalf, that there would be further violence to him and his family if he

The defendant now gave evidence before the Court of Appeal and said that he was accused of being a "grass". Upon one occasion his possessions were rilled and three letters from his mother were taken from his cell. He was told that the taker of the letters was now armed with his mother's address and was in a position to wreak vengeance on her if he gave evidence. The defendant went to the Legal Aid office in the prison in the company of "N" and said he would not in the forthcoming proceedings say a word about what had happened. He interviewed and charged "N" and matter.

There was no doubt that there was no doubt that there was order was made in respect of was evidence of duress which was evidence of duress which established that his mind was from putting that evidence. There were many ways of dealing with the situation where a person refused to give evidence. Sometime inaction and sometimes stern notice was necessary. How it was dealt with depended on the circum-stances. It was always wise that no action was taken in haste. More reflection should be brought to bear on the situation before a judge decided what to do. In a situation where protesters of one sort or another burst into his court, a judge had to take swift punitive action.

Calm reflection and consider ation of how best to deal with the situation was called for. Rules of justice applied to proceedings for comtempt of court as much as to any other proceedings. This defend-ant was denied his basic right to

Moreover, it was of the highest punished he was given the opportunity of seeking and taking legal advice and being represented. The judge over looked that matter and allowed the backdust matter and and allowed the obduracy and stubborness of the witness to overrule his cool judgement and dealt with him in anger.

Therefore the conviction must be

Its method is to work upon the sentiments, and that is something that has been out of favour with British audiences for a long time. The new audiences like to feel the effects of film in their viscera, not in their tear-ducts. But, if they are to be touched, then they want it done with a convincing impression of realism. If they catch themselves allowing their sentiments to be affected by some evident artifice, they are resentful of the nanipulation. In the end, of course, artifice is the nature of art, and all its effects upon us are a kind of manipulation; and there is nothing inherent in those effects that demeans either the artist or the audience. On the contrary, if we do not feel the least welling of a tear at The Mill on the Floss or a good Boheme or Madame X or The Kid or All Quiet on the Western Front or A Star is Born.

there is a lack in us. If we do, it is certainly nothing shameful or unhealthy. E.T. was a great corrective, because it became a matter of pride to have cried at E.T.; and that did something to shake the locks on imprisoned British sentiment. Not sufficiently, I guess, to gain acceptance for the sentimental purposes of The Outsiders.

The film is based on a 1966 bestseller in the American "young adult" market, written by S. E. Hinton. The genderiess signature belonged to a young woman who set out to write a novel about her despair at the senselessness of the ritual warfare waged by the young males she met in schooldays in the early Sixties. story gives the film a superficial resemblance to Rebel Without a Cause and the teenage films that followed it; but the comparison is misleading. Those films tried to give their characters some sort of social context. They were fighting a society in which they felt themselves outsiders, but still wanted a place. There was a conflict between the generations, a natural rebellion of the young against parents and against authority.

In Coppola's film society at large is not hostile to Ponyboy (C. Thomas Howell) and Johnny (Ralph Macchio), for the most part it is content just not to know they are there. Their misfortunes are their parents - dead in Ponyboy's case, callously indifferent in Johnny's. Coppola wants to show more elemental conflicts than in Nicholas Ray's film, in the feuding between the Greasers, from the wrong side of the tracks, and the Socs, boys from the affluent middle class, and between the boys' innate good nature and good sense and the aggressiveness demanded of them by the group-instinct of the

"I wanted to take those young street rais", says Coppola, "and give them heroic proportions." He achieves this steeped in film lore as he is - by returning to the heroic eras of the cinema. He imbues his film with the fatalism of You Only Live Once or They Live by Night or the French realist-romantics of the late Thirties. His images - the utterly fearless sentiment of silhouettes against red sunsets, or sunlit reflections on water - belong to as the death of the boys' crazy friend Dallas, caught and gunned down in the headlights of the pursuit cars that circle him. Carmine Coppola's music is used like a silent film score to supercharge each dramatic moment. The emotions of the characters are unabashed, and the dialogue is unrestrained by naturalism. At times it recalls the bare poetic ellipses of All Quiet.

If you are only prepared to yield to this long-unaccustomed appeal to sentiment, it works, enthrallingly, so that at the end you are fully prepared to accept, and to be touched by, the dying Johnny's exhortation to his friend Ponyboy to "stay gold" - gold being the innocence and responsiveness childhood of which some vestige has still remained in these two. Coppola has set out to recreate the experience of an age when movies and their audiences were younger, and the combination of the story, the images, the music and the words carried them off into new regions of imagination and sentiment. For this unfashionable spectator, he succeeds.

The message of WarGames is very much the same as that of The Outsiders. The principal character in the film is a computer in the United States Combined Operations Center with a facility for learning from its own mistakes, and mastery of a variety of games including Thermo-Nuclear War. At the climax of the film it has taken matters into its own hands and is about to annibilate the Soviet Union. The catastrophe is ingeniously averted by setting the computer to compete with itself at noughts and crosses. This pulls the creature up short with the puzzling discovery: "A strange game: the only way to win is not to play".

It is a useful moral for a nuclear age; and the enormous box-office attraction of the film shows that it is a very popular one among the threatened masses. WarGames to an extent is able to hide its own sentimentality behind the great mass of electronic machinery which, rather more comprehensibly demonstrated here than in, say, Tron, is as intriguing to older generations as to the computer-age young.

The hero is a lad who does not make very good grades at school, yet is a with his home electronic gadgetry (he has even bugged the school computer so that he can improve his grades). One day he accidentally links into the operations room computer, and playfully punches in fictitious information about a Soviet attack on Seattle and Las Vegas. The boy is hauled in by the FBI, and the Third World War is on its way when the youngster saves the day by teaching the old dog its instructive new trick.

It is a fable of exemplary simplicity, related with verve and suspense under John Badham's direction. Essentially a children's story - which accounts for its logic and good sense - it clearly has a very broad audience appeal: to prove it, the book of the film is available in both Penguin and Puffin (respectively £1,50 and £1.25, though the editions are identical apart from the pictures on the covers),

The National Film Theatre recently took a poll among members of the British Film Institute to discover their 30 favourite films, and these have now been programmed into a season which will begin on September 3. The members, God bless them, have presented themselves with a selection of films which is awfully nice, predictable and unadventurous. There are a couple of good Renoirs, La Grande Illusion and La Règle du jeu, a good Ford (The Grapes of Wrath) and an overblown one (The Searchers); but after that the choice is dispiritingly middle-of-the-road, middle-class middle-brow and bland. It is the kind of programme that circulates endlessly round the repertory cinemas.

There are no films made to tease and disturb and stir, no Buñuel, no Pasolini, no Anderson. There are no films before 1935, and no silent films at all: NFT patrons - despite the theatre's years of work - have no historical perspective. There is no Eisenstein, no Griffith, no Chaplin, no Stroheim, no Clair, no Lang, no Sternberg, no Vigo, no Jennings, no Dovzhenko, Mizoguchi, Fellini, Pudovkin, Satyajit Ray, not even W. C. Fields or the Marx Brothers. At the top of the list is Casablanca, a lucky strike of the journeyman Michael Curtiz. In second place comes Les Enfants du paradis, in third Citizen Kane. After that the preference is for musicals and colourful spectacle. There is nothing wrong in themselves with the films in the season; but the selection and the omissions give

It is rather as if a similar poll on great literature were to reach back no further than Edgar Wallace, and even then leave out Joyce and Eliot. In such a case we might worry about the state of the national culture; and this pleasant list of films must make the British Film Institute, who are just now celebrating 50 years of trying to build a film culture, wonder if the effort has been worthwhile.

Parthenogenesis is good boxoffice, I am sure. But the playwright John Pielmeier has taken no chances and filled out his study of a young novice's mysterious conception and infanticide with psychoanalysis, domineering mothers, smoking problems, girls obsessed with being overweight or unattrac-tive ("I left the Church because l had freckles"), a singing nun, menstruation and every other interest of the New York theatregoing public, for whom the Roman Catholic Church is potentially enough by itself.

In London, his play seems a strange specimen indeed, even in a serious production by Frank Hauser (no less) built around an impeccably intense performance by Susannah York as a psychiatrist who is ostensibly brought in to assess young Sister Agnes's sanity, but whose real task is to strengthen the proceedings with a shrink's crisis of faith similar to the one which proved so profitable in Eguus

She is an atheist who can now have no children, who saw her sister left to die of acute appendicitis in a convent, who vent to see Garbo's Camille five or six times in the hope that story gush so beloved of a different last reel might avert American theatre, and sails with the tragedy, and is still searching for something to produce attempts at humour as the happy endings. Confront ber discussion of what saints might with a Mother Superior (Honor smoke. (King-size for Thomas Blackman, unrecognizable in coif. habit and rasping Irish accent) who has her own claim of motherhood over the girl, and you have a situation which can look as though it has the stuff of drama and over which enough intellectual tie-ups can be cross-hatched to dazzle the stalls public and leave them with the impression that something significant is being said.

Agnes, whose baby has been found in a convent waste-paper basket, can remember nothing of its conception, but the potentially interesting question of paternity proves to be a side issue. When, under hypnosis, she relives the original act she utters a riot of eucharistic and nature imagery, sings a lewd little country song all too similar to Ophelia's in her mad scene and describes her partner in terms that would equally well fit Christ himself, an angel or a tempting ploughboy.

Hilary Reynolds has the task of making convincing theatre out of these ecstacies; perhaps they need a Patti Love to make them work, which they hardly deserve. With her baby face Miss Reynolds is convincing as the sort of novice (is there one?) who thinks "suffer little children" means "let children suffer", imagines good babies are conceived by an angel whispering into their mother's ear, and sees visions of the mother who sexually tortured her and must now be in hell cause she looks as though she has stepped out of a hot shower.

Miss York, making a welcome return to the London stage, handles her private confessions to the audience with a conviction that almost disguises their origins as the lifetact through such deplorable smoke. (King-size for Thomas More; St Joan would chew Gold

Improbably telling her to "get the hell out of it" with softly Irish "t's", Honor Blackman's Mother Miriam Ruth also gives proof of a versatility that suggests the cast have rosier prospects than the playwright.

Colin Matthews's Night Music is not a new piece. It was first heard in 1977 and published the following year; the BBC recorded it not long ago; it has been played in Europe and America. Which makes it the kind of work we ought to hear more of at the Proms - one with something of a track record, rather than a commissioned bolt from the blue. Matthews dedicated it to the memory of Deryck Cooke, who died while successful at capturing the piece was being written. The composer says this "no doubt influenced its somewhat elegiac mood", but on this occasion there was more of the dour, monochrome colouring suggested by the title than any feeling of elegy.

Indeed Night Music seems to be looking for a darkened melody in a pitchblack room: over obsessive low, punctuating chords from the wind (some-times attacked by louder horn calls, a difficult texture to balance well), fragments emerge: a rising flute passage, a sudden whisking aside of a curtain of strings to reveal busy wind activity. (This last move into a new section was punctu-ated to the bar-line by what souded like the yelp of an unruly promenading dog in the gallery.) The material recurs, expressively varied around a central section, but not until the last adagio molto does a ghost of a tune emerge into the light, only to evaporate at the close.

Under Richard Hickox, the score was projected soberly, accurately (a few awkwardnesses in the wind and one trumpet fluff aside) but without quite making its 20-minute stretch conere HICKOX splendidly spiky qualities of Britten's Sinfonietta. Op 1, with its two soaring violins over grunted basses a remarkable anticipation of sounds to come half a century later. Autony Pay (who recently conducted the Britten well) gave a disappointing account of Mozart's Clarinet Concerto, ill at ease with tuning in the Allegro and slowing the soulo voce return in the Adagio sentimentally. At the end, Beethoven's First Symphony: a lithe, energetic but not especially perceptive account, very well

A lot of trade tokens and printed ephemera of all kinds extend the value of the collections as social history, but also often delight on artistic grounds as well. Big institutional investors were said to have been sounded out yesterday about a placing of 40 million shares by the Burton Group. It is the second such occurrence in a fortnight. Such a placing would raise about £130m at yesterday's price of 334p, enough for Burton to buy the Richard Shops and John Collier chains from Hanson

But Mr Mike Wood, Burton's finance director, said: "Just you wait and see. There will be no placing tomorrow". Burton is now generally reckoned to be the front runner in the race against Mr Gerald Ronson's Heron Corporation and the shops own management to buy them from Hason.

That leaves English China as Charter's takeover favourite in the market's view and those shares held steady at 216p. Charter dropped 5p to 278p,

Mr Alfred Vogel, chairman of textiles company L D. & S. Rivlin, would appreciate someone telling him who exactly has sold a large stake in the company. Mr Mike Sagrand, the largest shareholder, still has his 26 per cent holding and the pension trusts and Mr L M. Rivlin still hold theirs. No large interest have shown up on the share register. share register.

still supported by thoughts that Misoreo may bid for it. TI Group rose 10p to 164p after its improved profit figures and hopes that the company will sell the Raleigh bicycle by the directors.

Elsewhere in the sector, BICC rose 5p to 233p in front of next month's profit figures. Hawker Siddeley climbed 6p to 324p ahead of its expected purchase of John Brown's turbine division. Hence of a good provery ision. Hopes of a good recovery by some secondary engineering stocks put 12p on Staveley at 260p. The shares of holiday companies were hit by fears that the price cutting by Thousen could develop into a price war, particularly as Horizon has just reported a sharp profits drop. Horizon shares were down 5p at 128p and Intasun were 3p off at

A bullish broker's circular put 4p on to Harris Queensway at 280p. In advance of profit figures due next Tuesday Taylor Woodrow added 5p to ton 530p. Ibstock Johnsen put on 5p to 161p as several brokers put out circulars suggesting that London Brick - unchanged at 80p -might bid after all. On Wednes-day London Brick described Ibstock as expensive and said there were other ways of expanding into non-fletton brickmaking than by buying Philips, the Dutch electrical grant, raised its interim net profits from 250m guilders to 250m guilders (£57.6m), while sales volume rose by only 1 per cent. But both sales of, and profits from, consumer goods are still under pressure and the company does not expect overall net profit for the year to grow by the forecast 4-5 per cent. The point agreements with AT & T in thirts sweether existence and with digital switching systems and with Warner and Siemens in recorded music are progressing.

Fall in money supply growth will continue, says Government

By Peter Wilson-Smith The Government reassured financial markets yesterday that it was bringing money supply back under control in an attempt to allay any remaining lears of higher interest rates. The Treasury said that it expected the annualized rate of noney growth to continue to fall in the months ahead. All three main measures of money supply are still running well ahead of the Government's 7 to 11 per cent target range in the February-July period. But final money supply figures for last month, published yesterday by the Bank of England, confirmed that monetary growth slowed sharply in July ifter the previous month's surge. Sterling M3, the most widely watched measure of broad money supply, is still increasing at an annualized rate of 14.7 per

Keeping confidence in the Commission

City Editor's Comment

Nigel Broackes, chairman of Trafalgar House, intends next month to press for publication of the evidence his side has submitted Commision Monopolies which is sitting in judgment on his proposed acquisition of P&O, the shipping

One has to admire his courage, if nothing else, securing necessary permission promises to be a bureaucratic nightmare. Now only does he need to get the approval of the Commission, but the Secretaries of State for Defence, Transport and Trade and Industry will also have to be won over. Doing that may well require a voluminous and indi-vidual submission to each because, though they may not have the legal right to refuse permission, they do have every right to demand

to be persuaded.

If and when those hurdles are overcome, the City Panel on Takeovers and Mergers will want to have its say. It is most unhappy with the idea because it thinks it would be unfair to P&O and confusing to shareholders if this information W2S published, without some independent assessment of its voracity.

In other words, the Panel will insist that the information be audited, and if that is not possible then they will surely want some independent opinion short of an audit.

But that will create a further problem. P&O will have to reply to these missives, or risk its silence being misinterpreted. And if it chooses to reply, that too will have to be audited. It is hard to see what is going to be achieved by all this - other than Mr Broackes perhaps achieving a tactical advantage in his bid battle by casting doubt on the provisional value of P&O assets. But against that, the risk of damage to the reputation and soundness of the Monopolies Commission seems to be very great indeed. There is already criticism of the quality of some reports.

That quality will surely not improve if principals begin to submit evidence, not in confidence, but with an eye instead to eventual publication.

Holmes à Court reminder

The appearance in London this weekend of Mr Robert Holmes a Court will remind investors that there are some takeover bids he sees through to the end.

He is here on busines with Associated Communications Corporation, the former Lord Grade company he bought lock stock and film rights against ail odds early last year.

His takeover of ACC set a pattern which has become increasingly his own: he bought a small stake ownership of which filtered out and became public knowledge.

The patter seems to be repeated at Fleet Holdings. the national newspaper and magazine group headed by Lord Matthews.

Mr Holmes á Court has built up a stake which his aids confirm is now 31/2 per cent. He has held about 2 per cent of the group for sometime but has been buying more recently.

Aggressor amidst the fleet

Last month, what was regarded as the "parental protection' stock held by Trafalgar House, Fleet's former parent company, was cancelled.

It effectively allowed Trafalgar to convert £15m loan stock into about 40 per cent of Fleet shares in the event of a takeover bid, and was designed to keep the infant Fleet independent until it began maturing. Even without this protection, any takeover intentions by Mr Holmes à Court looks premature, although he is offended by the suggestion that he would sooner walk away from a situation with profit than make a full scale bid.

But the sceptics were out in the stock market vesterday where Fleet holdings. emerged 18 months ago at 21p a share, fell back 3p to 119p. Even at this level, Mr Holmes à Court is still showing a profit.

the bids from Sunlight and Initial show encouraging buoyancy in both dry cleaning and textile rental.

The trend is encouraging and should set to rest the worries that Johnson's growth would slow just as it did after the Commission Monopolies blocked an earlier bid from Sketchley.

The improvement in profits has come from both dry cleaning and more importantly the textile rental side, which suggests the company is benefiting from a pick-up in industrial activity.

Dry cleaning has held up well throughout the recession with consumer spending remaining relatively high. The buoyancy in dry cleaning largely offset the difficulties on the industrial side, which in 1981 was losing

Jeremy Warner reports on an unusual meeting

Lunchtime rescue bid fails to satisfy chairman of TKM expense account hunch - four men, a secluded table at the Savoy, four courses, two wines and a large bill at the end. But this was no ordinary business meeting. They were talking big money - up to £70m. The aim was no less ambitious than the refinancing of a once prosperous international trading group now overburdened by a mountain of debt, supported by its bankers, and with no hope of trading its way into securer pastures

Ranged round the table were the chairman of British Car Auctions, Mr David Wickins fresh from his success in helping to save Group Lotus, the Norfolk sportscar company, Mr Stephen Evans from the stock-brokers Anderson & Co and Mr Murdoch Morrison, a freelance

Their guest was Sir Montague Prichard, chairman of Tozer Kemsley and Millbourn, the deeply troubled motor distribution and property group. It was his company they were

Sir Montague was installed as chairman of TKM last Christmas. He had been a director for many years. In the preceding years the group, which had once recorded pretax profits of £16m, made an attributable loss of £26m, while net debt, at £100m, had spiralled to seven times the value of shareholdrs' funds. Mr Kenneth Thorogood, the former chairman, and the ex-Stater Walker man Mr Malcolm Horsman, who had been managing director for two years, left abruptly.

Sir Montague listened with a mixture of hope and incredulity as his fellow diners discussed a plan that might all but wipe out the group's £100m banking

The times men claimed to speak for a group of share-holders together accounting for more than 50 per cent of TKM's

The plan was to raise an initial £13.5m via a one-for-all rights issue. This would be underwritten by financial and industrial companies who were already shareholders in TKM.

scribe an equal amount of new shares capital on top, taking the total raised to £27m.

They also wanted to see a strengthening of the TKM board of directors through promotion, from inside the group, of various executives in 1979 when the group lost its the subsidiary companies and through the appointments of

But try as Sir Montague may, he could not persuade Mr Morrison or Mr Evans to disclose the identity of their clients or those prepared to put up the hard cash.

He knew that Anderson had, over a long period put a lot of clients into TKM who were now nursing sizable paper losses on their investment.

He was also told that Mass Development of Kuwait with 9.5 per cent of TKM was a supporter of the scheme and that arm's length support was also being offered by Mr Kenneth Thorogood, who continues to hold more than 9 per cent of TKM, acquired in controversial fashion in May

But without more information. Sir Montagne could not take the plan seriously.
In any case, the deal would depend on TKM's legion of 86 bankers currently co-ordinated by a committee of those lending the company £5m or more cash under the chairmanship of

> Though the group returned to profit in its last half year of trading, these businesses are not of the scale necessary to service £100m of debt.

So far, the handling of the crucial refinancing issue has been a public relations disaster. An enormous gulf seems to separate board from shareholders and shareholders from supporting bankers.

The Morrison group apparently believed that its plan had been adopted in principle by the presented is worthy of being put board shortly before the annual meeting on July 19.

Emissary failed to close the credibility gap

from Lazard Brothers, on August 4, helped to head off a planned shareholders' revolt at the meeting.

But very little progress has been made since then. Another example of the communications gap is conflict over the role of Mr David Wickins.

He claims that he set up the original lunch to acquaint Sir Montague with the refinancing proposal and to offer himself as someone who might have a management contribution to make to Wadham Stringer.

Sir Montague claims, however, that he never fully understood the position of Mr Wickins in the affair so that when Mr Wickins sounded off in the press about a plan he had cooked up several years ago to float Wadham Stringer off, Sir

Montague hit the roof. The blue-blooded merchant bank Robert Fleming was recently appointed as emissary for the Morrison group but even this has failed to close the credibility gap that anonymity has created. If it is to get anywhere, the group will have to reveal itself.

Meanwhile its organizers are putting together a management team which they plan to move on to the TKM board when the time is right.

Besides Sir Montague, who has taken on the role of chief executive despite the original non-executive nature of his chairmanship, there are only two other executives on the board. The rest is composed of four non-executives who from time to time chair the group's

Information for Siemens shareholders

Respectable showing in stagnating markets

Although the international economic situation remained unsatisfactory during the first nine months - 1 October 1982 to 30 June 1983 - of the current financial year, Siemens recorded a 13% rise in new orders worldwide and a small 3% growth of sales as against last year's thirdquarter totals. Orders in hand rose 11% to nearly £15,100m.

New orders. Business differed widely in domestic and international markets and among the various operating sectors. New domestic orders increased 46% to £ 4,646m, due largely to two major power plant contracts. But even discounting the weight of these projects, domestic business brought in 7% more orders than in the same period last year. At £ 4,352m, new international orders remained 9% below last year's figure. Contributing to this result were the continuing stagnation of most industrial economies, balance of payment difficulties of several key client nations, and a slowing of initastructure expansion in a number of oil producing

Among the operating groups, Power Engineering and Automation was hardest hit by slow capital spending in many countries. By contrast, Communications the other of the two large Siemens Groups - achieved slightly more orders in world markets than last year. Above-average growth of new orders was recorded by both the Data Systems Group and the Medical Engineering Group. The latter has already sold fifteen of its new nuclear magnetic resonance tomographs, nine of them to customers in the U.S.A.

Sales, Worldwide sales increased 3% over last year's third-quarter totals to £7,247m. Business developed somewhat more favourably at home than abroad: domestic sales rose 5% to £ 3,205m, while international sales were only 2% ahead of last year's figure at £ 4,042m. Data Systems and Medical Engineering were also the strongest Groups in sales, recording twofigure growth rates.

inventory. Although inventories have increased 11% to £ 4,804m during the current financial year, this is due solely to major power plant contracts.

Employees. Underutilization continued to characterize most of the company's production facilities. Thus the number of employees could not remain entirely unaffected; worldwide, it declined 4% to 311,000. In the Federal Republic of Germany and Berlin (West) the reduction was 5%, and abroad 3% - a figure that would also have been nearly 5% had the employees of a plant acquired by Siemens-Allis not been added to the work force abroad. Employment cost went up 1% to £ 3,153m.

Capital expenditure and investment, at £ 283m, remained at last year's level.

Net income after taxes was £ 138m (last year: £119m), representing a net profit margin of 1.9% (last year: 1.7%).

How does your Siemens investment grow?

Every few years, Siemens invites its shareholders to subscribe for new capital stock by issuing subscription rights. These rights may be exercised by shareholders to purchase new Siemens shares, even without investing additional capital of their own. The graph shows how these: options can be applied to make 100 Siemens shares grow. The calculation assumes that each time there was a capital increase, enough subscription rights were sold by the shareholder to allow him to buy new shares with the proceeds alone. Thus from 1973 to 1983, his 100 shares have grown to 118. In 30 years' time, the number of shares has more than tripled. As a result, not only is the value of his portfolio bigger, but also the size of his annual dividend payment.

Instead of simply accepting ing agencies are arguing that cable operators can learn from what they see as America's

For the past two weeks, the agencies' trade body, the Institute of Practitioners in Adver-using, has been putting its case in a series of presentations to the 30 or so groups known to be reparing submissions for one of the 12 pilot projects to be licensed by the Home Office this autumn, as well as to some of the companies that will be providing national programme channels for the local operators.

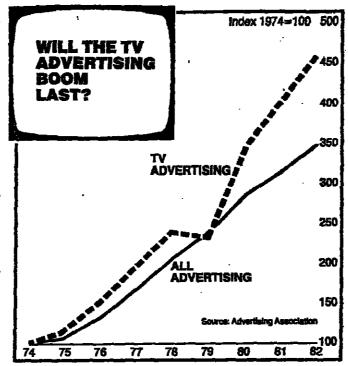

Mr Nicholas Mellersh, chief executive of United Cable Programmes, which intends to launch the sort of high quality, feature film channel that the advertising agencies are anxious to buy airtime on, is impressed by their arguments, but his company has still to decide whether to take commerci

This week, Mr Mellersh presented his business plan for the service - called TEN, which stands for The Entertainment Network - to the five partners in the United Cable consortium Rediffusion, Visionhire, Plessey, Rank Trident Cable & Satellite, and the American film company UIP. The question of advertising is fully discussed in the plan, he says.

"Advertising is of crucial importance to cable generally because there is a limit to what people will pay for their programming and it will help reduce that cost", says Mr Mellersh. "Whether or not it is right for the premium channels, however, is a different question.

"For example, should you interrupt a feature film with commercials? Some people argue that that ruins the film. home are used to having breaks As a further comparison, the in a feature film and there is no

A solution could be to allow advertising before or after the film but this would naturally be less attractive to advertisers than breaks in the middle.

Whatever happens, advertising agencies are uging the cable companies not to promise customers that there will be no advertising. "This is what happened in America and the cable companies are now regretting it", says Mr Peter Todd, media director of Davidson Pearce and chairman of the IPA's Cable Advertising Advi-sory Group. "It is very difficult to backtrack and allow advertising once you have set your face

The IPA is urging the cable operators to set up a sophisticated audience research system As a model, it points to Independent Local Radio which, after 10 years on air, now has a Radio Marketing Bureau and three national sales companies with cable. However, they do not want to wait 10 years for these facilities.

The agencies face a glaring credibility gap here, for they admit that in the early years there will be little advertising revenue. The Young & Rubicam report points out that it is likely to be 1995 before cable achieves 30 per cent penetration in homes, which is regarded as the minimum needed for a medium to attract serious consideration from national advertisers.

Since the audience research and the sales operation will be expensive to set up and run, the cable business will be tempted not to spend money on such facilities until there is the prospect of a real return. Unlike the radio stations and research, since their only source of income is advertising the cable operators can choose to do without advertising if they feel it is not worth the cost of

for sales departments and

There is the prospect of an impasse in which the advertisers stay off cable because they do not have reliable audience figures and because the sales process is too complex, while the cable operators refuse to provide better back-up services because there is insufficient advertising revenue to justify

Ultimately, the most crucial question is what level of advertising is "sufficient" to justify cable taking it seriously and on this issue few people are prepared to speculate. The IPA in its presentation to the Hunt Committee last year predicted that cable could attract £120m (at 1980 prices) by 1995, assuming a 50 per cent penetration of homes by then.

Many agencies, however, felt this was unreasonably optimistic and in its presentations to operators this week, the IPA has been refusing to put forward a figure, pointing out instead that display advertising revenue has grown by 25 per cent in real terms in the last 10 years and that television's share of this figure has risen from 36 to 41 per cent. With advertising's share of gross national product also rising, the implication is that cable operators should tap this growing source of income.

The fact is that advertising seencies will welcome any new medium, on the grounds that if it works it is bound to be to their clients' advantage, but they do not want to commit themselves to supporting it until they see the size of the

As the letter from McCann Erickson warns operators: "Remember that agencies are the guardians of other people's money and therefore cannot fund speculative enterprises. We need a very good case before parting with money.

Nevertheless, it would be a brave cable company that decided it could do without advertising once it was available. As the IPA pointed out in its evidence to the Hunt Committee, the best analogy for cable is not ITV but newspapers and magazines, which get some of their revenue from cover price and some from advertis-

In theory, the IPA says, the price of popular daily news papers would have to rise by a third if there were no advertis-ing quality dailies more than double and quality Sundays treble. Would the cable viewer prepared to bear the equivalent extra in the cost of his subscription?

may reflect a desire to make bargain purchases in anticination of an early end to the recession. But it also brings into sharp relief one of the more important unresolved controversies in accounting practice namely, whether car-tain types of business amalga-mation should be regarded as a merger rather than as an acquisition and, it so, now to define a merger and how to ition and, if so, how to account for it. The reported results in the year of similgamation can be ignificantly different, depending on the accounting treat-

Accountants and lawyers have been arguing about this subject for years, and the latest proposal from the Accounting Standards Com-mittee seems to have fuelled the controversy instead of resolving it.

Combine the assets

Those who argue for merger accounting believe that it should be applied where the amalgamation is brought about by an exchange of shares without significant resources leaving the combining companies. Such a transaction, it is argued, is readily hable from an acqui sition of a company for cash where the selling shareholders no longer retain an interest in the combined group. Reflecting the above distinction, advocates of merger accounting argue that the fairest presentation of a socalled merger is to ignore the market value of the newly acquired subsidiary (that is, the price which wo been paid in cash) and instead to combine the assests and liabilities of the individual companies as though they have always belonged to a single owner.

Similarly, group profits
before and after the merger of the combining companies are treated as though they had been earned by a single entity, and no adjustment is made to exclude profit earned by the newly acquired subsidiary before the amalgamation. So why the controversy?

By proposing a radically different accounting basis where a merger is identified.

Committee, presumably believes that a merger is a distinctly different transaction from an acquisition. It is implicit in such an assumption that a merger cannot stem from a one-sided desire to "acquire" the other company. Yet the latest propos would not automatically pro-hibit merger accounting in such circumstances. Indeed, such circumstances. Indeed, the only significant criterian to be met before merger accoun-ing may be applied is that the transaction is in the form of a share exchange and that 90 per cent of the offerces' shares

This will lead to distortions in measuring the return on the investment and in making comparisons between the profitability of a group built up by cash acquition and one built up by

Secondly, companies will be encouraged to pursue aquisi-tions by share exchange for asset-stripping purposes so as to generate higher "profits" than would arise under a cash transacton. This is because, under merger accounting profits accruing on underval assets in a company acquired for shares may be realized after acquisition and treated as profit of the subsequent period (albeit the distortion will have to be disclosed in the notes).

Thirdly, companies will be tempted to acquire new sub-sidiaries by share exchange towards the end of a financial year so as to boost the year's earnings. (Again, the effect of this practice would have to be disclosed in the notes presumably on the premise that disclosing a crime is as useful as preventing it.)

And, fourthly, companies will be able to create pseudo-

Distillers Exports exceed £450 million

Extracts from the Statement of the Chairman, Mr. J. R. Cater, and from the Report by the Directors, for the year ended 31st March 1983.

General comments on results Turnover and profits

The trading profit of £204.3 million was 12.5% higher than last year, reflecting improved results from each of our groups of products.

The increase in the sales value of Scotch whisky and gin, despite a reduction in volume, was assisted by the strength of the US dollar currency in which we invoice our shipments to the US of whiskies bottled in Scotland and Tanqueray Gin. With demand dampened by the economic recession, profitability was adversely affected by the relatively low utilisation of production capacity.

The Food Group and the Carbon Dioxide Company achieved increases in both turnover and profit.

The markets served by United Glass, the related company in which we hold a 50% interest, remained depressed. Due to further substantial redundancy payments and facility closure costs, our share of the recorded loss was only slightly less than for the preceding year.

Although UK interest rates were lower than twelve months earlier, the amount of income earned on short term investments and deposits rose by £6 million because of the higher level of our liquid resources.

The taxarion charge for the year ended 31st March 1982 was disproportionately lower than the charge for the previous year. The position is now reversed. Following a steep fall in the "all stocks index", the taxation charge for the year compares unfavourably with last year's charge, with the result that the profit after taxation shows an increase of only 2.5% against 12.7% in the profit before taxation.

Dividends

An interim dividend has already been paid at the rate of 4.50p, an increase of 1.50p per share over the preceding four years. The sole purpose of the increase was to narrow the difference between the amounts of the interim and final dividends.

The directors recommend a final dividend of 8.50p per share, making the distribution for the year 13.00p against 11.75p last year.

Scotch whisky Production

The export refund scheme for Community cereals, introduced in 1982, operated very satisfactorily throughout the year and enabled us to increase the proportion of Community cereals used. The only worrying aspect is the extent to which it is misunderstood by the British and the European Parliaments. It has been incorrectly seen as a subsidy to the industry. It is not: it is a proper reimbursement of the industry's own money.

Against a background of continued short time working in all Group distilleries, and because sales projections still disclosed an excess of stocks of maturing whisky against estimated future requirements, a decision had to be taken during the latter part of the year to close 11 of the smaller malt distilleries, 2 by-product plants, Carsebridge Grain Distillery and the Maltings at Port Dundas Distillery. The whisky maturation warehouses which form part of the closed distillery premises continued, and will continue, in operation. There are accordingly no immediate plans to dispose of any of these units.

During the year the Company commenced the sale of malted barley, employing the services of outside selling agents, which will enable greater use to be made of our malting capacity.

In a year when the Group's blending and bottling plants produced at a level well below capacity, it was considered essential to rationalise bottling activities in Fife. This resulted in the closure of Haig's outdated plant and the transfer of bottling to Distillers Company (Bottling Services) Ltd.

No new major capital projects were approved during the year but satisfactory progress was made in the completion of existing contracts.

EEC

In February 1983, the French Government finally complied with the European Court's decision of 1980 by removing the last element of tax discrimination against cereal spirits and in favour of wine spirits. In those three years, the French Government levied over £69 million in unlawful taxes on Scotch whisky imports. Simon Frères is continuing its legal actions to recover the unlawful taxes levied on its own sales.

The European Court condemned aspects of the Italian tax system which discriminate against Scotch whisky and gin. The Italian Government has not yet complied with those decisions.

The French Government recently introduced a new tax on spirits with an alcoholic strength of 25% or more, adding some 60p to the retail price of each bottle. This new discrimination makes the total rate of tax on whisky about 35 times higher than that on wine.

Direct comparison of industry exports with the preceding year is not possible due to the gap in reliable information for the period between March and August 1981. A comparison for the September/March period of 1982/83 with the same period of the previous year indicates little change in the Group's share of bottled in Scotland shipments. However, an increasing share of sales continued to be taken by very cheap brands imported in bulk. Bulk shipments accounted for a quarter of the Scotch whisky sales in the continental EEC last year, and a growing proportion is being bottled at very low strength.

It is pleasing to record a small increase in the Group's total shipments to the continental EEC markets in 1982/83 compared with the previous year. Johnnie Walker Red Label maintained its strong position with a particularly encouraging performance in France, and Black & White continued to perform well.

The Group's response to the increasing complexity and competitiveness of these markets is to strive to optimise coverage by Group brands of each individual market and to strengthen those brands through increased and selective investment in advertising and other brand-building activities. In this way the Group will be best able to benefit from any future upturn in economic conditions within the EEC.

Home sales

Figures for the year showed a decline of 5.3% in clearances of Scotch whisky in the UK, with the Group's share of the total remaining stable.

Johnnie Walker Black Label and White Horse performed well. The Claymore increased sales substantially, which was encouraging in the face of the continuing growth of private labels owned by major retailing groups. Haig persisted in a policy aimed to position the brand in the prestige sector of the market. The new arrangements for the marketing of Dewar's by Hedges & Butler made a satisfactory start.

An extensive review of the Group's sales and marketing activities in the UK will result in fundamental changes which will enable the Group to operate more efficiently.

In the last two years, reference has been made to the application to the EEC Commission for approval of a price structure for the UK market which would permit a number of Group brands, including Johnnie Walker Red Label, to compete effectively in the UK as well as in export markets. The decision continues to be awaited.

During the year the Chancellor extended to spirits a concession on credit for the payment of duty similar to that which has been allowed for a number of years on certain other alcoholic beverages. Although the percentage rate of duty increase imposed in the Budget was slightly less than the rate of inflation, taxation on spirits compared with wine and beer remained grossly inequitable.

Exports

The volume of Group shipments in the year was slightly down on the previous year, but profits improved by 14%.

This improved financial performance was due to price increases and to the strength of the dollar during the second six months of the year when shipments to the US almost exactly matched those of the equivalent six months of the previous year.

Because of the lack of HM Customs & Excise statistics of industry exports of Scotch whisky referred to above, it has not been possible to compare industry shipments of blended Scotch whisky during the twelve months ended 31st March 1982 and 1983. The statistics for the seven months ended 31st March 1983 indicate that the Group's share of industry shipments had declined mainly as a result of the substantial growth of bulk shipments of blended Scotch whisky at extremely low prices. Industry exports of bulk malt whisky continued at a high level, but the Group does not participate in this trade which is considered to be damaging to the long-term interests of the industry.

..... In December 1982 price increases were announced for our export trade with the exception of UK-bottled Scotch whiskies destined for the US. However, because of the economic problems in a number of key markets, the buy-in was less than last year.

Group shipments to the US were marginally below last year's. Trade sources estimate that the volume of Scotch whisky entering retail channels was down by 6% during 1982 and there is every indication that the Group maintained market share. The recent slight upturn in the US economy is not yet being reflected in spirit sales. Dewar's White Label had another good year and Johnnie Walker Red Label and Black Label performed satisfactorily. Most of our brands bottled in the US registered increased depletions to the trade. Usher's Green Stripe and VAT 69 Gold were our leading brands in this category.

The Group's trade with South and Central America was seriously affected by devaluation of currencies, loss of oil revenue and political unrest. Less was shipped to Venezuela and, as a result of devaluation and import restrictions, despatches will be adversely affected in the current year. The Group continued to have a major portion of the Scotch whisky trade in this market with its de luxe brands.

The Group had an excellent year in Spain. Trade was very satisfactory in certain Far Eastern countries and in a number of volatile Middle Eastern markets. Shipments to Japan were increased; White Horse maintained its leading position and Old Parr continued to make encouraging progress. Two new brands – White Horse Extra Fine and Johnnie Walker Old Harmony – produced exclusively for the Japanese market were first shipped towards the end of the year and initial sales have been encouraging.

A severe downturn in shipments to West Africa was the main reason for the decline in business with the African Continent. Sales in Australia and New Zealand were seriously affected by economic conditions.

Gin

Production at Wandsworth Distillery was maintained at close to maximum capacity and Tanqueray Gordon's operations continued at normal levels. As a result of reduced demand, Booth's operated well below capacity. The new bottling facility under construction at Basildon made good progress and should be on stream, as scheduled, by the end of 1983. Preliminary commissioning of the plant and equipment is already under way. As recently announced, it is planned to transfer the bottling of Booth's gins and Cossack Vodka to Basildon in 1984.

The economic recession continued to depress the market for gin in the UK and to encourage the growth of cheaper brands, particularly those owned by major retail interests. It is therefore encouraging to report that sales of Gordon's exceeded those of the previous year and the brand maintained its strong position as market leader. Although Booth's Finest Dry Gin lost further market share in the year, sales of High & Dry Gin again made a useful contribution to the Group's performance.

After two exceptionally good years, when previous records were broken, export sales of Gordon's declined, primarily as a result of import restrictions in West Aftica, a major export market. Gordon's and High & Dry increased shipments to France which continued its promising development as a gin market. Gordon's fared well in the markets in which it is produced locally, and the success of the brand in Spain merits special mention. There was, however, some loss of ground in the US and in New Zealand.

Exports of Tanqueray Gin to the US continued to grow steadily and the brand further consolidated its position of strength in the imported gin category. Shipments to other export markets also improved and of particular note was the performance in Canada.

Other potable products

Cossack Vodka experienced considerable pressure in the UK. However, the brand, with a recently introduced new bottle and label, is expected to make headway in the future.

Sales of Gordon's Vodka in the US, where it is produced locally, remained solid.

Cognac Hine achieved a significant increase in profits.

During the year Hine acquired Denis Mounie Cognac SARL which owns the potentially valuable Denis Mounie and Comandon brands of cognac.

Food Group

The Food Group had an excellent year, during which increased sales and improved production techniques contributed to higher profits.

The Peerless Refining Company continued to suffer from adverse conditions and a proposal to purchase this company, received from Acatos & Hutcheson Ltd, was accepted.

Carbon dioxide

Carbon dioxide sales showed a small increase during the year. A high volume of plant installation business, particularly overseas, improved profitability on the engineering side and overall profits increased.

United Glass

Demand fell sharply with particularly adverse effects on the Glass Container Division. Although trading profits improved, redundancy payments and other costs of facility closures rose. The result was a reduction in the overall loss from £6.2 million in 1981 to £5.3 million.

Trading conditions worsened in the first quarter of 1983 and further steps have recently been announced to restore a reasonable balance between production and demand.

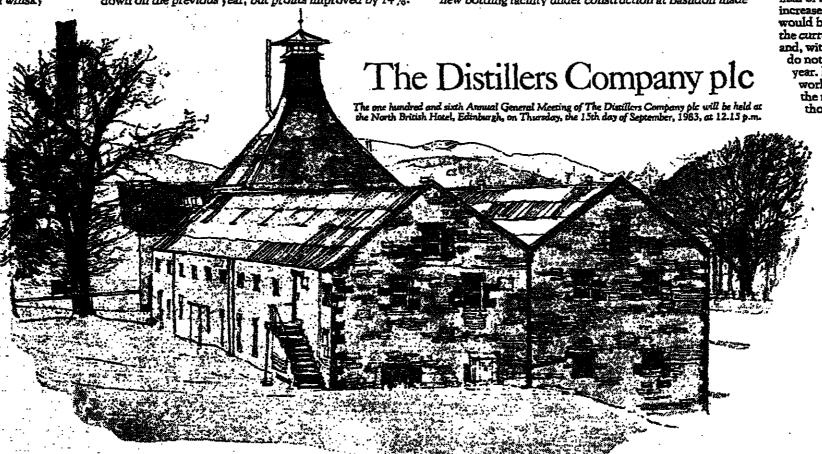

Personnel

The year was relatively free of local industrial disputes. The Group's employees worked hard to help to achieve the year's results in difficult trading conditions and the Board expresses its sincere appreciation of their efforts.

Future prospects

The Directors' Report highlights the difficult trading conditions prevailing in a number of important export markets, and stresses that the apparent improved consumer confidence in the United States is not yet being reflected in spirit sales. An intensely competitive situation continues to prevail not only within the spirits industry but in the wider field of alcoholic beverages generally, and recent price increases in export markets have had to take account of what would be commercially sustainable. Against that background the current year cannot be viewed as one of great promise and, with the experience of fifteen weeks behind us, we do not expect the volume of sales to match that of last year. In the absence of any significant upturn in world markets, therefore, present indications are that the results for the current year are unlikely to reach those we are now presenting.

Scot eats | Victory is two wins away breakfast | from final

By Barry Pickthall

Victory '83, Britain's 12-metre challenger for the America's Cop. won he fith round semi-final match against Canada I off Newport Rhode Island and now requires just two more wins in this nine-race the British youths' championship at Sumingdale. This matched the severe par for the New Course and stayed clear as the borde of challengers – there is a field of 150 – came and went. Michael Campbell and Stephen McAllister, and Paul series to be assured of a place in the final trials starting on August 28.

Victory, again skippered by Lawrie Smith, led from start to finish to win the 24-mile race by a margin of 1 min 58 sec. although her crew then had to wait for the result of a protest hearing before the result could be confirmed. and Stephen McAilster, and rain

Terry McLaughlin, Canada's skipper, alleged that the two yachts collided when Victory, on port tack, was obliged to give way during the pre-start manoeuvres. However, a film of the incident shot from a helicopter was produced in evidence by Peter de Savary's British team, which clearly showed the committee that a collision did not occur, and the protest was overruled.

In the second match of the day, Australia II, the radical Ben Lexcen design from Perth, notched up her fortyfirst win in the series (which began on June 18), beating Azzurra, the Italian challenger, by 2 min 25

Parkin the amateur champion. On the second day of the final defence trials, also being held off Rhode Island, Couragous, the 10-year-old boat which successfully defended the Cup in 1974 and 1977; beat Liberty, skippered by Denis Conner, in both theri encounters, to head the unofficial points table with three wins.

The International Yacht Racing Union yesterday responded to a request from the United States yacht racing union to rule on the legality of Australia's keel by calling on executive committee meeting in London on August 30. The meeting will frist decide whether, by taking the matter further, the union would be usurping the authority of the three-man International Measure-ment Committee, which has already ruled that the Ben Lexcen design does measure as a 12-metre.

Bailey can bless the wind

By John Nicholls

Graham Bailey, last year's holder and the points trophy, was a somewhat fortunate winner of the fifth race sponsored by Douglas Gill, in the National 12 championship at Llandudno yesterday. For most of the race he and his crew Karen Lincoln, had circulated in about tenth place and looked as if they would have to settle for this position at the finish.

Out ahead was Tiger Lil (Nigel Maddocks and Alison Leech) who, after rounding the first mark on the inside of Ill Wind (Peter and Margaret White), pulled away into what looked like a winning lead. But the old yachting adage of a race never being over until the winner's gan was again proven to be sound.

As the leading group of boats approached the final turning mark of the course, the already fickle easterly breeze went haywire. Boats were ruhning and beating on opposite tacks within a shortr distance of each other and at one time there were close-hauled boats on all three legs of the triangular

After a period of total calm, when the race officer realigned his final leg of the course, the breeze filled in of the course, the treeze milet in again and the fleet moved off. Bailey was in the right position to profit most from the new wind and ghosted on to win, with poor Tiger

Ill ending up eighth.

The points leader is now lan
Pinnell, who added a third place yesterday to his previous two firsts and a second. John Sears, leading on and a second John Sears, leading on points after the first few races, was welfth yesterday, his lowest position so far and has dropped to third overall. Bailey is clearly still highly competitive, but will not figure in the championship because he missed the first two races last weekend while winning the Soling national championship at Edinburgh.

Snedden spoils the party plans

CHELMSFORD: The New Zealanders, with six second innings wickets in hand, are 198 runs ahead

With one or two exceptions the Essex batting looked unusually brittle yesterday, and their innings buckled eventually to the bowling of Martin Snetden, whose haul of five wickets for 68 was by some distance his best performance of the tour so his best performance of the tour so far. Essex reached 233, which was a much better total than had seemed probable, and for that they were indebted to Pont, who was very much the cavalier as he hit 58 of his runs to the boundaries in an innings of 81.

In an hour and three quarter's batting before the close, the New Zealanders made 95 for the loss of Bracewell and then lost Franklin, Jeremy Crowe and Smith for 15 runs, to become 110 for four.

The sun reappeared and it was marvellously warm once again, with sufficient breeze wafting across the ground to make it a perfect day. Even the future looked bright, for the New Zealanders had declared at 321 for four, their total at the close on Wednesday, and the advent of Gooch meant that we would be Gooch meant that we would be served with an aperitif of rare

Stewards get help in disqualifying Soba

Habibti showed herself to be the fastest horse in Europe pacing Soba in the William Hill spring championship at York vesterday. Unfortunately, Sobs, the darling of the Yorkshire crowd was found by the steward to have crossed Crime of Passion shortly after the start. She was disqualified and placed last. David Nicholls, her jockey, said: "I knew something was wrong when I heard the other riders shouting behind me."
Nicholls was found guilty of careless riding and was suspended; for five days, the ntence to run from August 27 to September 1 inclusive. The incident was highlighted on the camera patrol film. The clarity of the video recording was made possible by the new £220,000 development which was used at the meeting for the first time. The stewards were able to watch a recording of the race played backwards and ferwards at any speed they wanted. "Thank God for this new process," Lt-Col Tom inglis, the senior steward's luglis, the senior steward's secretary, said. They would never have been able to study the race so closely otherwise.". Soba was drawn in stall 10, nearest to the rails. The filly broke smartly and Nicholls started to edge to his left, the filly down to last position.

That is why I football no less significant than to St Neots, returning home after midnight. Now, he does not really need the testimonial, other than in spirit, for it is a belated tribute to his exceptional years of service.

There is no thread of the club which did not come under his scrutiny. They say that when the reserve team trainer came to him to ask for new practice balls, though he might be engaged in the middle of buying Greaves he would demand to see the old balls, turn them over one by one, and say that this one and that one would do another six months. When a West End store delivered a wedding present which was one size a luncheon given to han yesterday by the Football Writers' Association, Nicholson was in no doubt: "The game today is too stereotyped, because there is more than one way to play it, but everything now is built on the same defensive principles. In my time, I could put on a practice session in which three defenders could hold up five attackers, but now no team is happy unless they have four defending against three. Almost all our practice was directed at attack; defending is comparatively easy.

"But the other problem is that schoolboys, instead of playing in the streets, which are now full of cars, with a little rubber ball, are playing with those big plastic balls, so that they never learn the skills. If I had my way there would be no eleven-a-side football in schools before the age of 12, to give them time to learn the garae, and I would insist on a 35-yard offside line to give them more room in which to play. But it is not just schoolboys who need skills and coaching. We have some tep-class internationals who don't know it all." Yet those who run the game, the moguls of FIFA and the place-men of the FA, seemingly remain indifferent to the decline. FIFA is obssessed with money, with World Cup deals which raise grave concern for probity; while the FA meekly accept FIFA's denial of any attempts to adjust the laws to foster entertainment. It is regretable that Sir Harold Thompson, the former chairman of the FA, could for so long have remained so inert to the path professional soccer was taking when the wisdom of men like Rowe and Nicholson, who did so much to shape the lacyon years of Pegasus and Casuals, was so. close at hand. HOCKEY British get off to a at Palace sorry start

From Sydney Friskin Amsterdam

British hockey was dealt two early blows on the first day of the European championship here with England and Scotland being defeated. Wales managed to salvage a point in a 1-1 draw with France but their result did little to offset the two carlier disappointments.

The day's main hopes were on England, bronze medal winners at Hanover in 1978 and the most functed of the home countries to reach the semi-final round. That chance from group A seemed to have slipped away when they were defeated 3-2 by Spain, who fought back spiritedly after being two goals down.

By taking a 2-0 lead, which is not particularly substantial on artificial turf. England had put themselve in a winning position. A perceptible lack of experience prevented them from consolidating and in the end the chance of saving the match evaporated in the afternoon sun when they failed to convert a penalty stroke. Such lapses are fatal at this level.

Everything went right for Engalnd at first, Sherwani capitalizing on a slip in the Spanish defence to put Engalnd ahead in the twentysixth minute. Faulkner increased the advantage with a well-taken goal after a centre from the right by Flora, but when Bordas converted a short corner almost on half-time England's security was seriously Spain's recovery was dictated from the bench where their German coach. Horst Wein, decided the tactics to be deployed. Eight minutes after the interval Bordas converted another short corner to square the match. England having been reduced to 10 men with Hughes under temporary suspen-sion for a dangerous stick tackle. Seven minutes later, with Hughes back on the field, the England defence was suddenly spread out and Taylor in goal had no chance to ston an angular shot from Gomez.

The Spaniards were jubiliant but they too had several anxious moments when England hurled themselves into a late onslaught. A short corner to England gave way to a penalty stroke and Francis who had just come on as a substitute, was asked to take it. He did not quite get hold of it and the Spanish

Earlier in the day Scotland were beaten 4-2 in group B by Belgium, who gave a display far above expectation. They raced into a 3-0 lead with goals by Urbain, Van der Gracht and Gucassoff. Then, with the Belgium diverse extracted to the control of two Belgian players suspended for rough play. Scotland struck through Tom Hay. After one Belgian player had returned Scotland scored again through Leiper from a short corner. but the Belgians made the game safe when Urbain scored again seven minutes before the end.

Wales fell behind France when scored from the top of the circle. But after the interval Wales raised their game and saved the day through Lewis after Western had made the Ireland were beaten 9-0 by the Netherlands to complete a poor day for teams from the British Isles. The Dutch, who are the favourites for this tournament, gave a superb display and overwhelmed the Irish after leading 2-0 at the interval.

Clean sweep for England in the Caribbean

By Joyce Whitehead

England's under-21 women's team won the Caribbean Cup in Jamaica at their first attempt, and had their vice-captain, Karen Brown (Surrey), named player of the tournament, Gillian Huggon (Yorktournament. Gillian Huggon (York-shire) scored twice to give them a 2-l win over Canada in the final.

On their way England beat Trinidad and Tobago 4-0 (K. Brown (2), G. Brown, Humberside, and E. Lewis, Middlesex), Wales 2-0 (K. Brown a penalty stroke, G. Brown), Canada 3-0 (K. Brown 3), Jamaica 2-0 (E. Lewis, K. Parker, Middlesex) sex).

The under-21s are a new ago group in England, and this was their first international tournament overscas. Throughout the fortnight they adapted well to the piches, which were a mixture of grass, dust and were a mixture of grass, dust and gravel owing to a drought.

Two queens dispute rule

By Pat Butcher

Jarmila Kratochvilova may not Jarmila Kratochvilova may not have many targets left for the season after breaking the world records for 400 metre and 800 metre and winning the gold medals at those distances in last week's world championships, but she will find one more when she lines up for the 200 metre at Crystal Palace on Sunday.

Sunday.
There Miss Kratochvilova will face the woman whom she deposed as 400 metre world record holder, Marita Koch, of East Germany, And Miss Koch just happens to have won the 200 metre gold medal in Helsinki. That in itself would provoke sufficient interest in their meeting as one of the principal confrontations of the European Cup weekend, but there are additional factors.

Miss Kratochvilova has only beaten the East German once, in the 1981 World Cup 400 metre in Rome, when Miss Koch had missed most of the season through injury, it was an injury last winter that restricted Miss Koch's endurance training, and caused her not to contest the 400 metre in Helsinki, but to go for the 100 metre and 200 metre where the 100 metre and 200 metre. metre where she won silver and gold medals respectively.

But Miss Koch agreed to run the 4 × 400 metre relay for the East Germans, and it was a decision which effectively denied Miss Kratochvilova her third gold medal of the championships. After a neck and neck struggle over the first two laps. Miss Koch built up such a lead over the Czechs on the third leg that not even Miss Kratochvilova could reduce the gap.

For all the excitement of relays, the important thing in athletics is individual performances, and Miss Kratochvilova had broken Miss Koch's 400 metre world record, becoming the first woman under 48 seconds, a feat that had seemed destined to be achieved by Miss Koch after she beat the Czech easily in Moscow and in Athens last year. This may all make for an intense rivalry, but it is one that manifests itself in a civilised fashion. The two women are good friends, and Miss Koch nominated the Czecth as her athlete of the championships in Helsinki, Miss Kratochvilova has often referred to Miss Koch as one relays as well has to decide which other distances she will run. With only one athlete per event in this competition. the metre to garner the maximum number of points. RUGBY UNION

American joins London Welsh

Peter Shavroth, an American player, is joining London Welsh for the coming season under an exchange arrangement which will see David Rees, the London Welsh wing, go to Denver, Colorado.

Shavroth, aged 24, a loose head prop who plays for American Eagles, and Rees are both teachers and were brought together by the London Welsh team secretary, Arthur Jones. He explained: "David wanted to go to America, and when we were on tour in the country last we were on four in the country last summer we met Peter Shavroth who was looking to teach in Britain."

Explode myths

A woman of 33 who had "always A woman of 33 was used to trained an bour or two a day just to tick over". Miss Battersby, from Battersea, has built up to a peak of 12 hours a day. "The first part of the book will attempt to explode some of the myths attached to training in sport – that it doesn't make women big and obese – and the second part will be devoted to the quadrathon." Women, she says, are better equipped to sustain endurance events because 22 per cent of their body weight is made up of fat, compared to 15 per cent in a man.

WATER SHAPE OF THE STATE OF

Cherry selling leaves a bitter taste Alfa Romeo's flat four "Roxer" engine is an outstanding power unit. Together with state-owned Italian group's latest slick-changing five-speed gearbox it is a much admired combination, all the more surprising, then, that a new car has just gone on sale in Britain without anyone beating the publicity drum about its engine and gearbox The Nissan Cherry Europe is the outcome of the controversial project involving Nissan Japan. sembled at a new factory in Italy and then mated with Alfa mechan-icals at Pomigliano d'Arco, near Naples, the home of the AlfaSud range.

It is intended to sell both Alfa and Nissan versions in Europe, but the appearance this week in Britain of the Nissan version, more than a month ahead of its scheduled launch at the Frankfurt motor show on September 13, and the very lowkey way it is being introduced, adds to the concern about this latest method of selling more Japanese cars in Europe, It has given Nissan UK another 500 cars in time for the August bonanza and about 6,000 in

The Times reported two months ago that the Alfa version called the Arna, after the initials of the joint company Alfa Romeo Nissan Automobili, would not be sold in

The official reason is that it will not help the strenuous efforts now being put into rebuilding Alfa's upmarket image here if it is associated with a cheaper "Japanese" car. However, sceptics like myself are inclined to ask Why is Britain so different from other European markets, where it is apparently planned to sell the two versions side by side.

European-built Cherries are distinguishable from 100 per cent Japanese-built vehicles only by their wider rear light clusters, lower positioned side rubbing strips and styled road wheels. The two models on offer are the Cherry Europe 1.2 litre, costing £4,184, and the 112 mph Cherry Europe GTI with a twin version of the 1.5 boxer engine selling at £5,349.

New Carrera

Of all Porsche's range, it is the classic rear-engined 911 SC which most of us associate with the Stuttgart company's image as a builder of very high performance sports cars. After all, it has been around a long time, considering it was introduced at the 1963 Frankfurt motor show. But when your designers hit the jackpot as convincingly as Porsche's did with the 911, development rather than change is all that is required to sell reduced. A number of other improvements include brakes with more power assistance. two-litre engine has increased in more efficient ventilation and new size and performance from 130 bhp style alloy wheels.

With effect from September 1, Porsche prices go up by an average of 4.2 per cent with the biggest increase, nearly 9 per cent reserved for the new Carrera. It starts at £21,464 for the Carrera Coupe and to celebrate a famous victory in the Targa versions and ends at £24,340 Mexican Carrera Pan Americana for the Cabriolet with full sport race and since then has always been equipment. A new Porsche 928S series 2 will go on sale here in Developing 231 bhp, it is claimed November and is said to be to reach 152 mph compared with exclusive to Britain. Apparently we the present model's 146 mph and to rate such special treatment because reduce the 0-62 mph time from 6.8 we are Porsche's second largest seconds to 6.1 seconds. Turbo Volvo

A small highly stressed turbo-charged four cylinder engine as an alternative to a bigger normally aspirated V6 would seem to have little to recommend it as the power unit for a large luxury saloon. But top of the range 760 series and it turns out to be a surprisingly good

Although the 760 is more than three-quarters of hundredweight lighter than the old 260 it replaced and much more aerodynamically efficient, it is still a lot of motorcar to move around. Powered in its basic form by the 2.8 litre V6 alloy engine which is produced in collaboration with Peugeot and Renault, it has acceptable performance for its class but suffers from rather heavy fuel consump

Vital statistics

Model: 760 Turbo (Petrol) Price: £13.249 Engine: 2,316cc 4 cylinder turbo Performance: Maximum speed 125 mph, 0-62 mph, 8.5 seconds
Official consumption: urban 20 mpg, 58 mph 36.2 mpg and 75 mph 26.2 mpg
Length: 15.7 feet insurance: Group 8

It was almost certainly to remedy this and at the same time cash in on the turbo "boom" that Volvo took its best known engine, the 2.3 litre four-cylinder is used in its midrange 200 series cars, and added a turbo charger and intercooler which increased output to 173 bhp.

As a result the 760 Turbo has a top speed of 125 mph compared with the 760 GLE's 113mph, accelerates to 62 mph in 8.5 seconds compared with 10.5 seconds and is on average four mpg more frugal returning around 22 mpg for mixed motoring. But at what expense to the car's driveability? I confess that I anticipated a car from happy meeting with poor flexibility and excess noise; hardly prime ingredients for a luxury car.

Yet the Turbo can be driven as smoothly as much bigger engined saloons and is noticeably quiet at speed. It is still possible to detect the "charge" arriving at around 3000 rpm but after a while even that fails to register.

Its angular shape is much more controversial. I like the front with its steeply sloping bonnet, front air dam and squashed radiator grill. But I have yet to meet anyone with a good word to say about the harsh lines of its squared off, tail-in-the-

La crème de la crème

EXECUTIVE SECRETARY

for the Chairman of an international, privately owned

Group of Companies Based: Switzerland. Five figure negotiable.

This is undoubtedly a most challenging, interesting and personally satisfying position, calling for a dynamic and mature person with initiative, diplomacy, self-reliance and considerable stamina.

Candidates should be aged at least 30, welleducated and have current minimum shorthand and typing speeds of 110/65 w.p.m. The successful applicant will be based in Switzerland and must be completely free from home ties as extensive worldwide travel is involved. A good working knowledge of French would be an advantage and naturally other languages would also be useful.

The appointment is undeniably tough but the applicant who can cope with its considerable demands can look forward to a very attractive 5 figure salary and other fringe benefits associated with a highly successful international Group of Companies. Apply in own handwriting with a full C.V. in the strictest confidence to the Confidential Reply Service, Ref: AEE 453, Austra Knight Limited, 66a High Street, Egham, Surrey, TW20 9EY.

Applications are forwarded to the client concerned, therefore companies in which you are not interested should be listed in a covering letter to the Confidential Reply Supervisor.

Diocesan Secretary c£14,000

A Church of England Diocese is seeking a Secretary to administer the running of the Diocesan Office and of the various Boards and Committees involved in the management of the Diocese.

The Secretary's main responsibilities and duties are to:-

(a) maintain proper financial records for the Diocese, prepare regular financial information and perform the treasury management

(b) ensure the efficient working of the Office, including all matters relating to administration and staff (c) provide secretarial facilities, assistance and advice to the Boards and Committees. Applicants, who should be communicant members of the Church of England, should be able to demonstrate that they have considerable experience both as administrators and financial managers. As such, a recognised financial qualification would be an advantage, as would knowledge and experience of computers and Church Law. Résumés, including a daytime telephone number, to R Bradford, Executive Selection Division, Ref. 848.

Kraketoa, because their Survive Special, KRAKATOA: THE DAY THAT SHOOK THE WORLD (ITV, 7.50pm) is not about that cataclysmic day back in August 1883 at all, but about what has been happening in the 36,000-odd days since then. A new volcano has heaved itself out of the sunken entralis of its horrible father who killed 35,000 people as it blow up and sank, somewhere east of Java, And now the bisty Infant, all 100th of him, is smoking and rumbling away just five his Dad, and managing the occasional tremor just to warn off anyone foolish enough to set foot on him. Nothing daunted, the German-born cameraman Dieter Plage ha thumbed his nose at the boistero documentary is the result. Not that nak Krakatoa is much to w Anak Krakatoa is much to write home about, it looks, in fact, as welcoming and fertile as the surface of the Moon; it is certainly just as deserbed. The real miracle of Mr Piage's film is not, then, the son of Krakatoa but the incredible richness of the flora and fauna that her returned to the maintening that has returned to the mainland at Ujong Kulon, 25 miles or so away, an area inundated by the 50th high tidal wave that Krakatoe pushed out as it sank into its grave. This is Nature's return with a vengeance iddler crabs, box terrapins, gorgeous blossoms, and the neer-stainet Java Phino that looks as prehistoric as the King Kong-type vegetation into which intrapid rameramen like Mr Plage venture in the hope of getting the monster in their viewfinder. Mr Plage is the first man to capture the beast on 9.40pm) is about resting continents that roam around the face of the earth whereas all that Krakatoa Snr. did was to crumble into the sea. The language in Moving Mountains is much more zai, as you would expect, but more often than not you should find vourself on terra firma rather than yoursell or being lifting laure a list sea as Dr Dan McKenzie of Cambridge University exclains why the expression "rock-solid" can be a contradiction in terms.

Town where the America's Cup runneth over

From Trevor Fishlock Newport, Rhode Island

It is an ancient mariner, his head a block of teak carved with a rusty chisel. "I'll tell you what the America's Cup is all about", he threatened in a voice made sandpaper by salt and cigarettes. But his words are lost as the jazz band on the jetty strikes up to greet the yachts returning from their day's jousting, and the groupies move forward to be nearer the crews.

All the nice girls love a sailor. and in cup year hearts melt faster than the butter almond ice cream, flavour of the month along Thames Street, which Rhode Islanders pronounce Thaymes, just to be different.

Newport is a fine old town with seventeenth-century roots, George Washington's pew in one of the churches and pretty painted wooden houses in streets that seem like sets built for a sea-going film epic. It is, inevitably, a place where shops are called Shoppes.

In its day it was a fortress of American class consciousnes where fearsome society empresses condemned unsuitable aspirants to the elite as "not at ease in a ballroom".

Here the super-rich, like the Vanderbilts and Astors, built their holiday mansions overlooking Long Island Sound. And when the America's Cup compe-tion move here from New York in 1930 the combination of money, high society and goldplated yachting, as well as the town's sublime situation, assured Newport's place as a magnet and famous resort.

The America's Cup is a major industry, and the economy here is partly built around the triennial challenges. Thousands flock here to imbibe the atmosphere created by what is essentially a non-spectator sport conducted out of their sight several miles out to sea. Some people go out to see the yachts in action, rather like making a safari in search of a rare animal, but most only see the yachts when they leave in the morning and return to their docks in the Twelve-metre yacht racing is the most costly of sports. The British challenge for the Cup, for example, is costing about £5m. And, in a variation of what Archimedes discovered, the yachts displace a lot of money which slops into the town to support hotels, restaurants, bars, shops and galleries selling yachty prints and other knick

Boutiques along America's Cup Avenue and 12-metre Mall sell thousands of T-shirts. The intense rivalries and loyalties here have made the T-shirt a modern version of heraldic king America's Cup White, a each evening, and have posted cheeky, if rather thin little wine, guards to stop peekers. there are many men here taking life very seriously indeed.

Crews are as battle ready and as dedicated as commandos, their muscles hard after long months of training and their team spirit sharpened by coa-ches and psychologists. Tensions are particularly taut this year because America's hold on a trophy it has never lost in the 132-year history of the competition has never been so seriously threatened. The teeth are being bared. On present form the Australians are favourites to beat Britain for the right to take on the Americans in the final showdown next month. The Americans are worried because the Australians have closed the technology gap with a controversial delta-winged keel the Americans think may not be kosher and which they are still trying to have ruled illegal.

There is a lot of huffing and fuss their secret weapon has for the purpose devices, and Newport is a T- caused. The Fosters lager flag flying over their dock has the It has to be said that while look of the Jolly Roger. The thousands of people are milling about reading each other's skirt around the keel when the chests, eating clams and drin-

Naturally you can buy "secret keel" T-shirt. The seriousness of this year's challenge offers a conun The British and Australian hopefuls are more competitive than any previous challengers and are in a long line of challengers who over the years have spent millions of pounds to win the ugly old pot. But the quintessence and mystique of the competition lies in the fact that the Americans have never lost the cup. It may be sentimental to say so, but if the Australians win the America's Cup the competition will never be the same again. Much of its magic will have vanished like

Newport, the America's Cup city, would be appalled. The traders would be downcast. And imagine the feelings of an American skipper who lost the America's Cup. The Americans would probably want to keelpsychological warfare in hand him and would no doubt America' Cup racing and the Australians are revelling in the borrow their controversial keel

Many have received treat-ment on kidney dialysis machines. Some are being given doses of vitamin E but it has been emphasized this is not "a miracle cure":

Health officials in three cities are working with the communi-cable diseases surveillance cen-tre at Colindale, north London, in an effort to find the cause of the outbreak.

The Trent regional health authority at Sheffield said that so far in its area six children had been treated for the illness at the Sheffield Children's Hospital and three were still in hospital.

They come from the hospital's catchment area of Sheffield, Rotherham and Chesterfield. Last year, the hospital treated four cases and two of the children died.

"My job, with other community physicians, is to try to establish a cause while clinicians work on a cure. We have received many suggestions as to a possible cause and are now getting down to the task of examining them."

The Centre for Applied Microbiological-Science at Por-ton Down, Wiltshire, has blood samples from all the infected children in the Black Country; cultures have been prepared in the hope of isolating the suspected virus.

But yesterday, an official said that the centre had no progress to report. It could take up to a week for anything to grow.

The Department of Health said that there were usually between 18 and 20 cases of the disease in the United Kingdom

The Papers

The New York Times said that it was rare for a proud and powerful nation to admit shabby behaviour but that is what the United States but that is what Klaus Barbie case.
Shameful as the episode was, the admission of blame the United States made on Tuesday, first to former are not always fully ripe and fluctuate consideribly in price. Spanish honeydew melons are good value at between 40p and 90p, depending on size, as are Italian blue plums, 25 to 45p a pound and greengages 20 to 25p. Best buys among homegrown fruit are blackbernes 60 to 30p a pound and blackcurrants 50 to 70p.

English runner beans 50 to 60p a itself and then to France, went far to redeem national honour, the paper commented. The salvaged honour, it claimed, came from a comprehen-sive Justice Department report that served history and invited us to learn from it. Learn what? it asks. "That there is a difference between blackcurrants 50 to 70p.

English runner beans 50 to 60p a pound, catabrese 50 to 80p, cauliflowers 35 to 45p each, courgenes 30 to 45p a pound and marrows 25 to 30p each are all recommended. Despite predicted price rises later in the year, English new potatoes, both red and white are good value at 10 to 15p a pound. So too are tomatoes at 25 to 45p a pound and celery at 30 to 50p a head. doing business with repugnant informers, even Nazis, and the far dirtier business of protecting accused war criminals."

The Daily Mirror makes its own

oid in the "stranger then fiction stakes with the story of Mr Sayed Abdul Mabood, who was challenged by Immigration officials at Heathrow. Suspicious by nature, they thought he was having them on when he showed a passport giving his birthdate as December 13, 1823. "Not so, they were told, Mr Mabood, a citizen of Pakistan has a Mabood, a citizen of Pakistan nas a son of 100 and another of 93, plus 12 other children. Listing "great events" of that year, the paper asks "isn't the most remarkable thing about 1823 simply that it was the year in which Mr Mabood was born?"

Burning topic

The Central Office of Information point out that before burning any waste straw or stubble, farmers should read the NFU Code on Straw and Stubble Burning. The code says that before starting to burn straw you should give advance warning to your neighbours, the local fire brigade, public owners of adjoining lands and if you're near a built-up area, to the local environmental health department. The fines for breaking local byelsws have been mind of the first former of the first former of the first former. raised to £1,000. Free copies of the code are available from local ADAS.
